DEDICATION

In memory of his student days in the Territorial University of Washington, in recognition of pronounced success achieved in commerce, mining, banking and the construction of great public buildings, and in special acknowledgment of the dignity and success with which he is rendering an important public service as President of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, this book is respectfully dedicated to

JOHN EDWARD CHILBERG.

J. E. Chibberg

The Blind Boy to His Mates.

Memoir of
Commencement U. of W., 1906

Hard is my lot; that, first and last, I know.
In hope, in gloom, whether at work or play,
My lot is hard; nothing can that gainsay.
But I have learned to feel the softened blow,
The kindness that can lessen human woe.
Fellows, my friends, I thank you all each day,
And most I thank you when I kneel to pray
In that deep dark which is my share below.
Eyes you have been to me, eyes and a voice;
Denying self, you've spared your time to me.
And while you've read, my heart has felt your choice
Of self denied, and thus your will to be
Brothers, has helped my darkness to rejoice
In dreams that I may help the blind to see.

FOREWORD

IT IS with pleasure that the Juniors submit this 1910 Tyee to the students and patrons of the University of Washington. Ten volumes of the Annual have been issued successively to date. Each has sincerely purported to present authentically and thoroughly the history of the college year just preceding its publication; and no less earnestly have the editors of this book endeavored to make it a close record of the year 1908-9.

The greatest possible care has been taken in the selection of engravings and in the presentation of subject matter. Truly, some alterations have been made in the arrangement and division of departments, but the book is purposely modelled after the best in previous Tyees, with an aim toward elevating its general tone.

Our college days will perhaps always be remembered as our brightest and happiest, in spite of their occasional reverses, and if this volume will kindle those pleasant memories, recalling vividly to mind the events which transpired during that time, then it will have fulfilled its mission.

BIG BEAVER (Reverie)
Chief of Blackfoot Tribe.

History of the University of Washington

THE University of Washington has been a part of the governmental equipment from the beginning of this Commonwealth's separate existence. When the Territory was first organized in 1853 there were less than four thousand people in the domain, and yet those few pioneers had an abundance of hope and foresight. In preparing the foundations for the future State they were swift to recognize the value of education. At the first session of the Territorial Legislature provision was made for a complete system of common schools, and at the same time an effort was made to secure the cap-sheaf of that system in a Territorial University. Governor Issac I. Stevens, in his first gubernatorial message, recommended a memorial to Congress requesting a grant of land to aid such an institution. This was done, and Congress acted promptly by granting two townships of public lands for the purpose.

Thus far the progress was rapid enough to satisfy the most sanguine of the settlers, but at that point there was encountered an obstacle such as has proved troublesome to nearly every one of the new States of the West: a contest over the location of such a desirable institution. The second session of the legislature, in 1855, enacted a law creating two Universities, one to be located at Seattle and another at Boisfort Plains in Lewis County. Each institution was to have one-half of the granted lands. The need of the Universities was not as great as the ambition of the pioneers. The several boards of County Commissioners neglected to select the lands. No one proposed to abandon the idea of a University, but it was allowed to drift with other plans for a greater future. In 1858 the Legislature combined the two Universities and chose as location Cowlitz Prairie in Lewis County. To counteract this move, some of the dissatisfied settlers incorporated the Puget Sound University, as an independent institution.

This display of determination, coupled with the continued failure to realize on the granted lands, caused the Legislature to enact a law in 1861 locating the University in Seattle, and providing that the granted lands must be used for the erection of buildings and that the citizens of Seattle must give a free site of at least ten acres. To carry those provisions into effect a Board of Commissioners was appointed, consisting of Rev. Daniel Bagley, John Webster and Edmund Carr. The Board organized on Washington's birthday, 1861. Arthur A. Denny offered a free site of ten acres on the old "Capitol Hill," since demolished to make room for the New Washington Hotel and other buildings. That site was rejected when Mr. Denny offered any ten acres that might be desired from his farm. When the site was finally chosen it was found that about one-third of the area extended into lands owned by Charles C. Terry and Judge Edward Lander, who promptly joined with Mr. Denny in making the gift to the Territory. The Commissioners then sold enough of the granted lands to clear the site and erect the first buildings. Before the Legislature convened again the buildings were finished and classes were organized for instruction.

The University was surrounded by a dense forest. The population of the Territory was sparse and poor in everything but courage and ambition. Higher education entered upon a severe struggle, which endured until statehood was achieved in 1889. Very little aid was extended from the Territorial treasury, the total appropriations amounting to less than $35,000.

With statehood came a transformation and an awakening. Appropriations were made large enough to remove tuition fees and to declare the University free for all citizens of the State. The ten-acre site was found to be inadequate and the State provided a large campus of 355 acres, on which five new structures were erected of brick, stone and iron. The ten-acre site in the center of Seattle was leased on most favorable terms, the ground rent being paid on an increasing valuation up to a total of $3,500,000, and at the end of the leasehold all the improvements become the property of the University. The State has given the University 100,000 acres of granted lands, which at the minimum price of $10 an acre means an additional endowment of at least $1,000,000.

The departments of instruction have been increased, expanded and strengthened, until the name of University is no longer a mockery. The standards were raised and maintained until cordial recognition was won from the oldest and most conservative institutions of the Eastern States.

With a teaching staff of more than a hundred, including graduates from the best institutions of Europe and America, with a student-body of sixteen hundred crowded into halls and temporary sheds, the University of Washington is about to enter upon its third period of marked development. The first period was the time of foundations, the time of Territorial stress and strain from 1861 to 1889. The second period was the twenty years of expansion from 1889 to 1909. The beginning of the third period is marked by the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition. For the first time in the history of such enterprises, an effort is being made to retain as much as possible of the money and labor expended for permanent use. Being located on the large campus of the University, all of the improvements to the grounds will be retained, resulting in a beautiful park to take the place of a wild stretch of forest. At the same time large portions of forest land will remain in native beauty along the shores of the lakes. At least four of the important Exposition buildings are being made of permanent stone, brick and steel, designed for use by the University after the Exposition is ended. Several of the so-called temporary buildings are also to be saved for University uses. Important works of statuary and collections of historic and economic value will be saved. In short, it has been estimated that the results of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition will advance the material interests of the University of Washington to a point that would require twenty or more years of ordinary growth to be attained.

PRESIDENT THOMAS FRANKLIN KANE.

What The University Stands For

WE recognize that the highest object of the University is to produce good citizens, men of character, patriotism and lofty purpose. Perhaps the University's policy is revealed in regard to character training as satisfactorily as it can be revealed when it is said that we do recognize that this is the first duty and the highest object of the University. Character cannot be made as we make concrete or hardened steel; character cannot be tested and modified as we test for impurities in the laboratories and throw them out. In character building we are dealing with the human will, the human taste, the human choice.

It is important for a student to come to do the right thing, but it is still more important that the atmosphere and spirit of the University be such that the student will of his own moral judgment come to see the wisdom of doing the right thing. Our belief, then, is that to secure given conduct in the student in the University is important, but that it is even more important to develop independence of character, personal responsibility and self-accountability. This principle is the great undercurrent of all government at the University. This is the principle which determines the attitude of the instructors toward the students both in and out of the class room.

To this end the regents and president of the University endeavor to appoint to the faculty men who primarily are well prepared for the University work, and men who at the same time are manly, whose lives are wholesome and association with whom will be beneficial. We cannot, as a state institution, ask for a given creed or a given faith. We extend a liberality which will insure sincerity, a liberality which will secure to each individual the right to work toward the ideals of the University in the way in which he can be most efficient.

However different may be the methods of the individual instructors toward moral ends, the ideals are the same as to the importance of moral development and character in the University work. Whatever may be the departments or curriculums of the University, the obligation and opportunity for developing manly character are the same. In thinking of our State University's policy in moral training it would be well to keep two facts in mind: First, that more than half of our students are twenty-one years old or older; and second, that the students themselves are left free to maintain religious organizations. The Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. both have organizations in the University, each with a paid secretary on full time, and there is also an organization of the Catholic students of the University known as the Newman Club. The work of the students through these associations is, in the main, sane, wholesome and beneficial, and commands the esteem of all classes of students.

The second great object of the University is to prepare students for lives of usefulness in the state. We should call attention, too, to the importance as a moral force of the useful in education and training. The student that is prepared at the University for a life of usefulness and service will be given at the same time strong impulses toward uprightness and character. To prepare men for lives of usefulness means to prepare them to do the work which needs to be done in the state. The maintenance of every school of the University can be justified on the ground of its service to the state, in preparing men for the work that needs to be done in the state.

The College of Liberal Arts, which is the nucleus about which most of our universities have been built, would be justified on the ground of any one of several services which it is rendering. For example, in this college, at the present time, are registered many students who are preparing themselves as teachers for the high schools of the state. At the last commencement in June, 1908, fifty-five graduates took the normal diploma at the University, which is equivalent to a state teacher's certificate for life.

In this college, too, is the general training for the men who are to become lawyers, physicians, ministers, professional men generally, and business men. Already in the curriculum courses are provided for the student who is later to study law, who is later to study medicine, who is later to go into commercial lines. There is a special course for the student who is to take up newspaper work. On this principle of the state's need and of service to the state, the schools of the University have been established, including the College of Liberal Arts, the College of Engineering, which embraces chemical, civil, electrical and mechanical engineering, the School of Mines, the School of Law, the School of Pharmacy, and the School of Forestry. The student may select his college training with reference to any calling which he expects to follow.

Colleges and Schools

FOUNDING THE UNIVERSITY

On the recommendation of Governor Isaac Ingalls Stevens in 1854 the first legislature of Washington Territory appropriated two townships for a University. Six months later, January 29, 1855, it was enacted that two state educational institutions be built on these tracts, one on Boistfort Plains, in western Lewis County, the other at Seattle.

After several fruitless attempts to establish these colleges the two were combined, and in 1861 the corner stone for the first territorial University was laid at Seattle. College opened in the winter of 1862.

Not until 1875 did the first University catalogue appear. From it one learns that the institution contained primary, intermediate and preparatory schools, in addition to a college having a classical course of four years, a scientific course of three years, a musical department, and a military school.

Rev. George F. Whitworth was first president. The faculty was limited to six members.

COLLEGE OF LIBERAL ARTS

The College of Liberal Arts is the oldest and largest department in the University. It was founded in 1862, first as a number of separate departments. Later it became known as the College of Literature, Arts and Sciences, and finally, in 1901, assumed its present name. In 1908-9 there were 817 students enrolled in this college. Arthur Ragan Priest is dean. There are now sixty-eight faculty members, and ten undergraduate assistants.

COLLEGE OF ENGINEERING

Dean A. H. Fuller is head of the College of Engineering. Forty members comprise the faculty. The enrollment for 1908-9 was 287. This department was organized in 1896, and embraces civil, chemical, mechanical and electrical courses. Owing to the very favorable location of the University, engineering students are enabled to supplement their regular college work with practical inspection and testing of the various engineering interests in and about Seattle. Because of the high-class work done in the engineering department, its graduates have been successful in stepping immediately into responsible positions in the Northwest. They have made good in every instance.

SCHOOL OF PHARMACY

Fifty-eight students are taking work in pharmacy, which was added to the curriculum in 1894. The present faculty consists of twelve members, with C. W. Johnson as dean. Two courses of study have been outlined. A two-year course prepares its graduates for responsible positions in the profession of pharmacy and as pharmaceutical chemists. The four-year course is an extension of the two-year work and leads to a regular college degree of Bachelor of Science in addition to the degree of Pharmaceutical Chemist.

SCHOOL OF MINES

The School of Mines appeared in 1896. It offers a complete four-year course in mining alone, or a course in geology and mining, leading to a B. S. degree. There is also a short course of three months in the spring, offered to prospectors and professional miners. There are thirty-four faculty members in this department. Milnor Roberts is dean.

SCHOOL OF FORESTRY

This school was established in the University in 1907. Its two-fold purpose is to afford instruction in the principles and practice of forestry and to promote the interests of forestry in the State of Washington by encouraging the right use of forest resources.

Exceptional advantage is given the school by reason of its location on a 355-acre campus, much of which is timbered, and offers opportunities for field work in silviculture and forest measurements. In close connection with this course is the government timber testing service, established here in 1905. Francis Garner Miller is dean of the school. Thirty-seven students are enrolled.

SCHOOL OF LAW

Next in popular attendance to the College of Liberal Arts is the School of Law, with an enrollment of 142. This school became a part of the University in 1896. It is a course preparing a student for law practice in any state, and graduates are admitted, without examination, to the Washington bar. The law course is now two-year, but in September, 1909, will be lengthened to three years. John T. Condon is dean, there being nine other members on the faculty.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY

The latest school installed in the University is that of Domestic Economy, which was made a part of the curriculum in September, 1908. C. W. Johnson, dean of pharmacy, is head of the new department. The prime purpose of this chair is to prepare students for teaching domestic economy in the high school. It is a four-year course, leading to a degree of B. S.

SCHOOL OF JOURNALISM

Such a demand was made for a chair of Journalism, that in September, 1907, a course was organized, with Merle H. Thorpe at its head. At first it was a short course; then in February, 1908, was created a separate department in itself. It is rapidly becoming one of the most popular and important schools in the University. Last year two students majored in the course. This year, the second year of its development, fifty-one students are enrolled and are majoring in it.

SUMMER SCHOOL

The fifth annual session of the Summer School closed July 31, 1908, after the most successful six weeks' summer work ever done in this institution. In addition to the regular college course offered by the course, special work is given for high school and grade teachers and graduate students.

LIBRARY

The University Library was organized in 1879-80. L. F. Anderson, a student in the class of 1882, was first librarian. In 1889-8 Florence M. Adams became librarian as a member of the faculty. Beginning with that year an annual appropriation of $150 was set aside. In 1895 the library was moved to the present building, and in the summer of 1907 to Denny Hall. William E. Henry is head librarian, with C. W. Smith as assistant. Miss Emma P. McDonnell has charge of periodicals and local Northwest history. Miss Josephine Meissner is circulator. These, together with Miss Curry, head cataloguer, and four student assistants, compose the library staff. The library now contains upwards of 36,500 bound volumes, besides several thousand pamphlets.

Bon Voyage

Dedicated to the Class of 1909

The warm wind bloweth in the west,
And swiftly ebbs the tide,
And sadly cometh the behest,—
Ye may no more abide.

No more may throng these wonted halls,
No more may grace its lea;
The lust of new-world conquest calls,
And ye must forth to sea.

Farewell, farewell, oh! comrades brave,
A pleasant port be thine,
A tranquil journey o'er the wave,—
Bon voyage, Nineteen-Nine!

:: Senior History ::

A few days more and the Class of 1909 will be an institution of the past, separated forever. Before the disintegration it is fitting that a brief history of its career be chronicled. Only in the fact that its span of college existence is the same, is the Class of 1909 like any other class—in all other respects it vastly differs in its greater works of achievements in setting higher standards for succeeding classes.

It is visionary to say all classes are alike. They differ as men differ, and for the same reasons. Though a composite organization, a class is judged by the accomplishments of its individual members. And by this criterion 1909 will live as the leader of its generation in the minds of all who knew it.

As Juniors and even as underclassmen, when Seniors should have been moulding student opinions, our class had a powerful influence in directing undergraduate policies. We have instituted needed reforms, projected and carried through innovations and managed our finances more successfully than any of our predecessors.

It was the Class of 1909 that put the Pacific Wave in the list of college dailies. Ours was the first class to stage its Junior play in a downtown theatre; the first to approach graduation unencumbered by debt; and, no less important than all else, the first one to participate actively in athletics and other student affairs in its Senior year. Undisputedly, during this past college term more Seniors have been taking part in athletics than has ever been the case in the past.

The football team, for instance, was strengthened to a championship eleven by five Seniors—the best men that ever donned suits for their Alma Mater: Frank Babcock, Burwell Bantz, Paul Jarvis, Fred Tegtmeier and Guy Flaherty.

F. L. Vernon and Burwell Bantz turned out for track; R. L. O'Brien and Arthur O'Neal are working with the crew; Herman Allen, Victor Zednick, Kenneth Durham, J. A. Stenson and Glenn S. Corkey in debate and oratory—all are Seniors ready and willing to work for their 'Varsity even in their last year.

Besides those mentioned, '09 has had Hal Tibbals, A. E. Williams and Gordon Burke in track work; Walton Mackey in football; Doak Lowry and Walter Dunbar in crew; Victor H. Garvey and Edward Ellis in baseball; and Violet Dungan, Carrie Connors, Mabel Morgan, Edna Baird, Olof Caskin, Roy Rudio, Ralph Easter, Bert Hanson, and A. M. Harris prominent in a variety of student enterprises.

It might be mentioned in this resume that '09 won the cane rush in its sophomore year, overwhelmed its opponents in the tie-up the same year, and achieved the distinction of passing through the plug scrap this year with but two plugs damaged.

The Senior Class has made its impression, and that a good and lasting one. Other classes have been influenced for the better, and when we are individually gone and scattered to the cardinal points, the one consolation will remain, that our deeds will live after us, ennobling and inspiring other plodders along the academic path.

—HELEN C. TILLMAN.

Who! Which!
What! When!
U. of W.!
Nineteen Ten!

Junior Class History

When the future classes of the University of Washington shall glean over the annals of her brilliant ethereal history, seeking an ideal class to emulate, out of the illustrious heavens of her many classes will shine one guiding, beckoning star, the class of Nineteen Ten. Other classes have lived their cycles, have flourished and waned, but fixed and ever brilliant, the Class of Nineteen Ten will guide the incoming years through victory and fame, until there shall have gathered at our portals such a galaxy of classes, that, in the succeeding years, Washington will ever stand, famed as "the great University of the West."

Under the most auspicious of circumstances, there gathered at our University, in the fall of nineteen hundred and six, a class of over four hundred Freshmen, a class whose enrollment was as large as that of the entire University four years previous. Nor did it take long for this giant to realize its prowess. It might be said that it never went through the period of adolescence, for on the second night of its existence, with ridiculous ease, it bound the "much vaunted Sophs," and, taking them to Denny Field, improved their sallow complexions with a liberal coat of green—PAINT.

This was but the beginning of a series of almost unbroken victories for Nineteen Ten. After being robbed of the "cane-rush" by a few "unscrupulous officials," whose "pity" had gained ascendancy over their "better judgment," Nineteen Ten proceeded to demonstrate her superiority in every branch of college activity. In football, with such stars as Willis, Canutt, Bragdon, Sample and Beck, she completely obliterated the remaining spark of life in '09. In inter-class track, cross country and on Junior Day, Nineteen Ten won such brilliant victories, that "old grads" predicted, and with just cause, a new era of life in our University, an era which was soon to lead to that true college spirit which now gives Washington winning track, winning baseball, football championships and an unconquered eight. Never had a Freshman class so revolutionized University affairs.

Nor did the triumphant career of Nineteen Ten end, as so often has been the case in the histories of her predecessors with her Freshman year. So well did she rear 1911, and so thoroughly did she teach her tender charge the lesson of humility and respect for her superiors, that with the exception of track, '11 never became aware of her individual existence. After winning the cane-rush, by fifteen hands to spare, Ten gave the Fresh their first lesson at pig-skin chasing, defeating them 11 to 6. Next came our victories in cross-country, which were followed by our winning the Fresh-Soph baseball game, 4 to 2. Finally to crown her victories Nineteen Ten won, for the second time, the Junior Day Regatta. Among her W men are Beck, Earl Brown, Roy Brown, Hall, Holdman, King, Lovejoy, McKechnie, Meagher, Jones and Willis.

Not to athletics alone does Nineteen Ten confine her prowess. In Debate and Journalism she has such prominent representatives as Fitch, Fretwell, Jones, Black, Goddard, Stahl, Foss, Burleson, King and Harrison. In dramatics she has ever led the way. During her Sophomore year she successfully staged several Shakesperean plays, and set an unprecedented example, by presenting to the University, a new four-oared barge. Her Tyee editor was elected, his staff appointed, and her manager had planned his system of finances even before the Junior year. Her Junior Prom. and Junior Day Committees had been appointed and had laid the foundations of their work, even before the Thanksgiving holidays.

In all branches of college activities Nineteen Ten has done herself proud. As a Freshman class she set her ideals high, as Sophomore, she climbed a dizzy height in nearing their attainment, and now, as Junior, she is ever striving, ever nearing the goal. To her foresight, her perseverance, her energy, her enthusiasm as a class, her success may be ascribed.

Never flinching, never fouling, but ever hitting the line hard, she has striven towards making her Alma Mater, that Greater Washington, to which, she may at some future day, return, and, on viewing the old familiar scenes, with bared brow and swelling heart, ever murmur at her shrine:

“Thy sons, O Washington beloved
Lift up, lift up their heads in pride
By whatsoever sea removed To thee, their hearts in love are tied.”

—EDWIN J. BROWN.

Sophomore History

IT was September 16, 1907. Things were looking pretty blue for Registrar H. T. Condon and the registration fees rattled rather lonesomely in their little tin box. Jay Whitfield yawned and the clock ticked loudly on the wall. It was the lull before the storm—something was going to happen—something did happen. Past the station filed a suit-cased army—recruits from near and far, dusty and bedraggled, and yet destined to be the glorious class of 1911. It was the class which has done big things ever since it landed; the class of which the University will be proud for years to come.

Nineteen eleven was received with open arms by both faculty and student body. The very air in the Ad. building exuded a warm welcome. The class scattered into every activity in college. Debating clubs grabbed much promising material; the crew, track and football bulged with 1911's. Then, as 1908 passed beyond the sheltering portals of its Alma Mater, we, the class, advanced a year.

The whole college world lay before us to be conquered. We donned a maroon head-gear bound with a white band, and adopted the dignified and significant title of Sophomores. Then it was that we began to do real things. Such men as C. D. Smith and E. A. Seaton in cross-country; Roy Green in track; Polly Grimm and Wm. Mattson in football; Fred Angevine in oral expression; Rex Roudebush in debate, and Roy Pinkerton and Russell Parker in journalism, are examples of the classmates we are proud of.

The foregoing is a birdseye view of our class during its two years of college life. Now I will take you into the midst of some of our bloodiest battles, through some of our many class victories and past the few defeats we have undeservedly experienced. Nineteen eleven Freshmen "procs." were masterpieces of literature and refuted logically and wittily every epitaph set forth in the "procs." of 1910. It was the general sentiment throughout the University that our defeat in the cane rush and the underclass football game during our first year was the bitter which we must expect with the abundance of sweet which has fallen to our lot. However, on Junior Day, 1908, we, as Freshmen, scored more points than all the other three classes combined. This victory was only a small feather in our maroon hat compared to the glorious victories which have been ours during our Sophomore year.

We won the last cane rush which will probably ever have been rushed. The inter-class football game was 0—0 in cold figures, but was easily in our favor. The presuming unsophisticated Freshies placed one of their insignificant emblems on the 'Varsity flagpole only to have it ingloriously burned by a brave Sophomore. We had little difficulty in quelling the infants who tried to interrupt our Sophomore frolic with red pepper, and just to show our superiority we planned to leave them in the dark during the Freshman Glee—but unfortunately we cut the wrong wires.

Our masterful authority over these green, puny infants, has been severe yet just. It hurts us as much as it does them, but it is for their welfare. Strict discipline has been ours. A set of rules has been drawn up, and in enforcing them to the letter the upper classmen have aided us materially.

After reading this unbiased and impersonal chronicle, is it difficult to realize what class is the magnificent product of the twentieth century—the acme of advanced civilization? We, 1911, are the friends and protectors of the faculty; the stalwart defenders of the commonwealth, upon whose shoulders rest the future destiny of our great nation.

:: Freshman History ::

THE Class of 1912 may well be called "The Icono-clast," for never have more traditions been overturned than were during its first year at this University. The subject of editorials in both Daily Wave and Washingtonian, and still further honored by comment in the Washington Alumnus, it has nevertheless pushed its way steadily until now it has completed a record which,—but the record speaks for itself.

Our football history can be written with the same pen that writes the history of the 'Varsity championship eleven of 1908. From the large number of Freshmen who turned out when Coach Gilmore Dobie began training, four were chosen to compose the back-field during most of the hardest-fought battles of the season, while one in the line was universally named as All-Northwest end, and still another became famous as the best punter developed in this section of the country for some little time. To cap the climax, Melvin Mucklestone, right half-back, was chosen to lead the 1909 team, thereby establishing a new precedent at Washington.

In basketball, as the season closed, we had one member of the first five, and two substitutes. Much material has likewise been offered for track, crew and baseball, and it is not doubted but that when those teams are selected our class will be well represented. In the interclass football struggle on November 26 both Sophomore and Freshman elevens lined up without a single member of the 'Varsity squad on either side. The resultant score was a tie; but it was acceded that our class deserved the victory.

In debating circles we were represented on the Oregon intercollegiate team and had an alternate on the team to debate against Idaho. Negotiations are now pending between the class and Freshmen classes at Pacific University and Idaho for the establishment of forensic relations. Two of our members were designated associate editors on the Daily Wave staff for the first semester, while on the present personnel we have five reporters.

Socially, we have been hampered by the faculty regulation that but two "affairs" could be given by us, and also that no Freshman should be allowed to attend any frivolous collegiate function during his first year. One of our two lawful frolics took place on January 15, being in the nature of an informal. The second was the Freshman picnic April 17.

In the annual Sophomore-Freshman tie-ups, our class is justified in claiming the victory. The cane rush was won by the upper classmen, doubtless because of their better knowledge of the fracas. A new tradition, "The Sophomore Class Burial," instituted by the class of 1912, resulted in the successful interment of an antiquated polecat on Denny Field. The spot is now marked by an appropriate tombstone.

MEN'S ATHLETICS

ATHLETIC MANAGERS AND COACHES.

The Athletic Outlook

ATHLETICS at the University of Washington are of higher average standard and are established more firmly today than ever before. The splendid support given to our teams by the student-body and the public, the remarkable growth of the University, and the energetic efforts of coaches and substitutes have furnished the conditions most favorable for success, but the athletes themselves deserve the most sincere praise for their long training and hard-fought battles.

Although in the old days many brilliant athletes won renown for the purple and gold, both by individual victories and by strength of team play, from one season to another in the same sport was a perilous step, the results of which none could forecast. Contests were difficult to obtain and had to be accepted whenever and wherever they could be had. The coaching, the equipment, the ground, the attendance, and the public interest varied spasmodically. Perhaps the greatest single factor which has permitted steady growth and has thus assisted in bringing our athletics to their present excellent position has been system.

Glance at the year's scores recorded in this volume of the "Tyee." In spite of a clean sweep in rowing and football, it may be that the whole record does not favor Washington greatly. Are we in doubt as to next year's scores? No, decidedly not. Back of the mere figures for the past year are certain facts which account for this general confidence.

Many of the men composing the Varsity teams and crew were only a trifle better than the substitutes. Back of the substitutes stands a third line of defense, each man eager to fill a gap in the ranks before him. The loss of our dependable old warriors in the senior class will be felt keenly, but in the future such an occurrence is not likely to really cripple us completely. Our systems of training are more or less firmly established now. The practice needed and the skill demanded for each sport are so well understood by the group of students most directly interested that the standards are fairly certain to remain of high class. Slack methods and poor results would not be tolerated for any length of time by the student-body. With the present severe competition for places on teams the material that comes to the coach's master hand is of prime quality and abundant quantity.

The Pacific Northwest Intercollegiate Conference assures us of all the systematic competition we need in every sport except rowing, in which the California universities are worthy rivals. Requests for matches are received frequently from more distant colleges, but unless the conditions happen to be unusually favorable, as in the recent baseball tour of Japan or the coming events at the Exposition, such contests are rarely as satisfactory or productive of as much lasting benefit as a tilt with our old rivals. By way of preparation we will gain an immense amount of individual pleasure and profit, besides raising the Varsity standards, by any system of matches among ourselves in which a large number of students can take part. Cross country runs, interclass rowing and interfraternity ball games are sports of the right sort, but these alone do not reach the majority of undergraduates. When the proposed stadium, practice fields and dressing quarters become available next fall the conditions for exercise will be much more favorable than at present.

The Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition offers a splendid opportunity for Washington men to meet prominent visiting athletes in all branches of sport on our own campus. Invitations are being sent to all the colleges and athletic clubs to enter individuals or teams for the standard track and field events, as well as for baseball, various rowing races, tennis, a Marathon race, cross country runs, relay races, basketball, boxing, wrestling, swimming and canoeing. The honor of winning place and prize in an event open to amateurs the world over is enough inducement to urge one to his very best efforts. For many of our students this will be an opportunity of a lifetime. In a sense, Washington will act as host to the visitors; in baseball and rowing we may be asked by the Exposition management to hold ourselves in readiness for several games and races. The advantages of such a plan will lie not only in the contests with strong and experienced rivals, but also in the privilege of practicing with them and studying their varied systems of training. If we are trained to the minute and ready in every detail for the major and minor sports—and we cannot afford to be otherwise—we will give a good account of ourselves to the strangers whom we meet, and the experience gained by us will last through more than one college generation.

FRED TEGTMEIER, Captain 1908.

QUAMPIONS OF THE NORTHWEST—this is the story of the season; the story that all know and applaud, but few know the privations and hard work that was undergone by the coaches and men before this goal of all aspirations could be reached.

The season did not open prosperously. Few of the old players were back, and many of those who did return to college were prevented from turning out for various reasons. The new material was light and, as a squad, slow. The new game requires above everything else men with speed and headiness, so that plays may be built around them. A slow, big man is of very little avail when the ball must be advanced ten yards in three downs, but when there is neither weight nor speed to work with, then the coach really has his troubles. Coach Dobie realized this, but he knew another factor that goes a long way to make up for any deficiencies a football man may have,—determination. Full of this quality himself, he called out the players' own latent powers until no obstacle could stand in their way.

LINCOLN AND WASHINGTON GAMES.

The practice games with the Lincoln and Washington High Schools, which the University won 22 to 0 and 23 to 5, respectively, showed that the "Varsity" had the real fighting spirit; but it also showed that a heavier line was needed in order to assure a championship team. Then it was that the five big Seniors, Guy Flaherty, Burwell Bantz, Paul Jarvis and Frank Babcock decided to do what they could toward making a successful year, even if it did endanger their diplomas. With these "old timers" on the field, Washington's hopes rose rapidly.

CUTTING, Asst. Coach.

MUCKLESTONE, Capt.-Elect.

WHITWORTH GAME.

The season proper opened with the Whitworth game on Oct. 17. Although Whitworth College is not in the conference, her team was known to be strong, and a contest with her would give some idea of Washington's real strength.

It was a fiercely contested game, and not until the last part of the second half did Washington's rushes begin to tell on their lighter opponents. At the close of the game the score was 24 to 4. Whitworth succeeded in dropping a goal from the thirty-yard line.

COYLE

THE WHITMAN GAME.

October 24 was the first conference game, and was won by Washington, 6 to 0. The Whitman team played hard ball and got men away on two occasions for long runs. In the last half Washington's superior team work told, and by consistent bucking the touchdown was made.

EAKINS.

WASHINGTON STATE COLLEGE.

The game with W. S. C. November 7 was the most exciting game of the year. Both teams were determined to win the victory and their playing showed it. But neither team could cross the other's goal line. Time after time Washington carried the ball to within a few yards of W. S. C.'s goal, but just as often were held before the coveted touchdown could be made.

W. S. C. scored first by kicking a place. Washington followed shortly by also making a place kick, and added a safety by blocking a kick behind W. S. C.'s goal.

The advantage now seemed to be all on the side of the 'Varsity. Just how it happened no one knows. W. S. C.

punted a spiral that carried over the defensive full-back's head and rolled to the goal line; here a Washington man fell on the ball. A safety was given to W. S. C., the officials believing that the Washington man was forced over the goal line by the opponents. This tied the score.

W. S. C. can lay no claim to the championship, however, for Washington has been victorious in all other games, while W. S. C. crossed not a single goal line during the season.

OREGON.

Twenty players, two coaches and the manager composed the party that went to Eugene, Ore. The trip was enjoyable from every standpoint. One night was spent in Portland on the way down, which served to lessen the hardship of the long ride. An early morning train was taken to Eugene, so that the team had nearly a full day's rest and a good night's sleep before the game. Oregon students had their usual big rally the night before the game, but the Washington men were sent to their rooms at nine o'clock, so did not have a chance to watch the enthusiasm displayed. The day of the game was ideal, and a crowd of cheering rooters lined both sides of the field.

WESTOVER.

BANTZ.

There was considerable discussion over the condition of the field. A great quantity of sawdust had been used as covering and made it almost impossible to start quickly or side step. This was a handicap on Washington for the men were not used to footing of that kind. When the game was called Washington's players were determined to win in spite of any handicap.

The first half ended 0 to 0. Washington made a touchdown in the first five minutes of the second half, and twice repeated the performance before the finish. It was feared before the game that Moullen's drop and place kicking would do great things for Oregon, but they were never inside Washington's 55-yard line, so our goal was never in danger. Oregon played a punting game, but with Eaken to kick and Coyle to return Clarke's long spirals, Washington was superior even in this phase of the game. It was a great contest, and the little bunch of Washington supporters who had taken the trip with the team felt more than repaid.

On the homeward journey a great banner hung on the side of the team's car. Washington 15, Oregon 0.

but O. A. C. rallies quickly and could be counted on to take desperate chances. If Washington could win this game her title to the championship was clear. Thanksgiving afternoon was clear but cold. Between thirty-five hundred and four thousand people stood in the grand stands and bleachers watching intensely for the teams to come on the field. As the opponents lined up for preliminary work very little difference was apparent, either as to weight or speed. But a difference was found when the game started. O. A. C. fought pluckily, but Washington played with a fierce determination that was irresistible. With fierce line smashes and splendid formation plays, Washington rolled up the largest score made in the Northwest.

BANQUET

On the evening of December 8 a banquet was given at the Washington Annex to all the men who had turned out faithfully for practice during the season. About fifty were present, including many down-town friends. The feature of the evening was the presentation of the gold medal left by the 1908 class to be given each year to the player whose work was the greatest source of inspiration to his fellows. Guy Flaherty received the medal this year. A bar with the name of the receiver and year of winning is to be added to the medal each season. The emblem will be kept in the trophy room of the University.

How the Championship Was Won

(By Coach Gilmore Dobie.)

IT IS beyond all question that the University of Washington football team has just passed through a very successful season. This was not due to any one cause, but, as in every successful season, many elements contributed and worked in harmony to accomplish the desired result. To begin with, Washington had not in several years held the foremost place in football among the Northwest colleges. This fact made the championship the more desirable, and proved to be an auxiliary rather than an impediment. Again, the student body, the faculty, the general public and the press, all contributed their hearty and enthusiastic support.

The members of the team, fellows who proved themselves the most able to represent their institution in intercollegiate contests, were without exception men of high character, loyal, enthusiastic and hard workers. Each did his best to place his University in a high and enviable position.

The most important factor in the campaign, however, was the second team. A good second team is as essential to a good first team as a private is to the army. Without one the other cannot exist. It was largely due to the untiring efforts of the second team and the masterly coaching of Joe Cutting that the first team was able to go through the gruelling season undefeated. It was through these exponents of true sport that Washington had a winning team in 1908—through men who, for the true love of the sport and from purely patriotic motives, loaned their ever valuable services that their college might be represented by a team which could uphold the honor and dignity entrusted to them when put to the test.

Not only did the second team display its loyalty by its hearty co-operation with the first team, but every man looked forward to the time when he himself would be called upon to represent his University, and so set himself earnestly at work with a determination to master the fine points of the game, so he could give a good account of himself in an intercollegiate contest.

From the beginning this spirit of determination was manifest, and the season was not far advanced when it became evident that Washington was to have a second team that would not only give the first team the sharpest kind of practice, but would include among its members men who would be perfectly competent to represent the University of Washington on the gridiron in future years.

"Six to Five"

Hopeless and savage and sullen were they,
Crushed by the weight of a cruel despair,
Fierce in their reckless and surly play,
Raging at bleachers they knew did not care.
Hurled down the field by a heavier foe,
Hanging their heads at their flaunted shame,
Glad when the referee's whistle bade "Go,"
Glad they had struggled half way through the game.

Cut by the lash of a pitiless scorn,
Scored by a heart-broken, merciless coach,
Roused by his sneers to ambition new-born,
Grimly resolved to efface all reproach.
Grimly resolved when they went on the field,
Harder and better and faster to play,
Smashing the foemen and making them yield,
Forcing them share the black shame of the day.

Hot beat the sun on them; grew far away
Bleachers and rooters; and faint as a dream
Sounded the voices; fierce grew the play;
Fearless, relentless, triumphant, they seem.
Careless of laughter and heedless of jeers;
Momently glad as they even the score;
Scorning revilings now changing to cheers—
Furiously fighting, they gain one point more.

—ROY M. CRISMAS, '10.

The John Barrett Loving Cup

WASHINGTON was first winner of the silver loving cup offered by John Barrett, of Portland, Oregon, director of the International Bureau of American Republics in Washington, D. C., to the Universities of Washington, Oregon and Idaho, for the intercollegiate football championship of the Pacific Northwest. It is to be held by the winner until the close of the next football season, when it goes to the champions of that year.

The cup was designed by one of the best experts of Tiffany, and has the following characteristic features: There are three handles, upon each face of which is etched the figure of a football player, the respective figures carrying on their breasts the letters, "I," "O" and "W". Engraved upon one side of the cup itself is the following wording:

Intercollegiate
Football Championship
Pacific Northwest.
Presented by John Barrett.
"May the Best Team Win." 1908—

On the opposite side is the wording:

1908.
Washington, 15; Oregon, 0.
Oregon, 27; Idaho, 21.

On the third face is etched a spirited football scene, with the players engaged in a scrimmage in the foreground, and a large grandstand in the background, with three flags flying over it, carrying respectively the letters, "I", "O" and "W".

The conditions of the competition for the trophy are that any one team winning it two years in succession becomes the permanent owner. If no one team wins it two years in succession, the team that wins it twice first in four years becomes the final owner. This final provision is necessary because if no team wins it twice in three years it will require the fourth to decide the competition.

Senior Football Men

TOO much cannot be said in honor of the Senior athletes who turned out, almost in every instance at great personal sacrifice, to help build the 1908 championship football team. These men, although burdened with heavy courses in working for their degrees, found time to respond to the call of their Alma Mater in her time of need. The result, a championship football team, illustrates the power of true Washington spirit. The men who deserve mention for their college loyalty and spirit are Captain Fred Tegtmeier, Burwell Bantz, Frank Babcock, Paul Jarvis, and Guy Flaherty.

All these men have finished their careers in University athletics, and will be keenly missed.

Tegtmeier has played three years of Varsity football and three years of Varsity baseball. For two years he was selected all Northwest center. Last season he played end and center.

Burwell Bantz has played tackle and end for four years. He enjoys the distinction of having played through every game in the last three years without being out one minute of time. Last season he captained the track team, and was one of the strongest men in the weights.

Babcock played two years on the Varsity. His first year on the team won for him the title of "Bull Moose" Babcock.

Jarvis has filled the positions of tackle and guard for three years. He has always been a reliable and consistent player. Besides earning his "W" in football, he was a member of Washington's first championship eight-oared crew.

Guy Flaherty has played tackle and guard on the Varsity for three years. His work has always been of a high order, and as a linesman he could always be depended upon to hold his man.

Basketball

TEN basketball games were played by the 'Varsity team this year. The nearest approach, however, to an intercollegiate contest was with the University of Puget Sound at Tacoma. For years basketball was not considered worth the attention of the University, but such enthusiasm was manifested in the sport this year that the Board of Control authorized it as a collegiate game.

A strong team was formed, consisting of: M. W. Tupper '12, Elmer L. Sugg '12, and C. C. Tolman '12, forwards; C. C. Clementson '11, O. E. Keeler '11, and C. A. Brown '11, guards; James I. St. John '10, center. Following is the schedule of games played:

TRACK

BURWELL BANTZ, Captain 1908.

		Track Season 1908
--	--	-------------------	--	--

IN the old days the track team of Washington was known as the best in the Northwest. Times have changed since then, and for the past few years Washington has suffered repeated defeats in this branch of athletics.

The season of 1908 gave much promise of success. In the indoor meets and cross country runs there seemed to be a wealth of material, but by spring time interest began to lag. The crew took some good track material, baseball drew a share, and many men dropped the work for no apparent good reason.

Whitman defeated Washington in a dual meet, and in the triangular both Oregon and Idaho repeated the performance. Oregon far outclassed both Idaho and Washington, but the fight for second place was only decided when Idaho won the relay.

Only five men won track emblems: Burwell Bantz, weight man; Frank Coyle, Cleo King and Frank Vernon, distance runners; and Hugh Bowman, who surprised Oregon by defeating their veteran, Moullen, in the pole vault. These five won most of the points for Washington.

With efficient coaches and a student body of fifteen hundred, Washington has no excuse for taking defeat from institutions one-third her size. The whole trouble is that our students are not willing to pay the price of victory. To obtain success on the track requires longer and harder work than for any other branch of athletic activities. Our team was almost entirely made up of underclassmen—only one upperclassman winning his letter. This condition should not exist. Success can not be hoped for if men cease training at the end of the sophomore year.

Great praise is due the men of the 1908 team for the conscientious work they have done. It is to be hoped that a great many more will follow their example. With an all-souled interest and a determination by every man of even moderate ability to do his part, Washington can and will win. There is no half-way course. It is either win or lose. May Washington in the future take her rightful place as a leader in this as in all other activities.

Track Outlook for 1909 Season

UNDER the able coaching and supervision of Dr. D. C. Hall, the track prospects for this season are gratifyingly promising. The main strength of the team will probably lie more in the general excellence of the men than in any individual stars.

Of the old "W" men turning out are Burwell Bantz, '09, for weights; Cameron, '10, for the quarter mile and relay; Joe Harrison, '10, in the pole vault, and Captain Frank Vernon, '09, for the half-mile and mile.

Several men who did track work last year are out. Among them, Ed. Campbell, '11; Lewie Williams, '10; Clarence Berge, '09; and H. S. Gibson, '11, are trying for the quarter, relay and mile, the two former men also doing the broad jump. In the pole vault Billy Kerr, '10; J. A. Soule, '11, and James Clark, '11, show promising quality. Clarke and Campbell are entering the high jump, too. Roy Green, '11, and A. E. Williams, '09, promise to make first-class sprinters. E. Shorricks, '11, and Paul Jarvis, '09, have entered for the weights.

Among the new material turning out are: Clyde Marsh, '10; Charles Mullen, '12, for the sprints; William McKay, '12; W. B. Severns, '12; C. D. Smith, '11, and Enoch Karrer, '12, for the half-mile and mile; Wee Coyle in the hurdles; K. W. Thayer in the pole vault; E. F. Burns, '12, for the quarter-mile; and Mark Woodin, '11, and Carter, '12, for the high and broad jumps.

START IN CROSS-COUNTRY RACE.

Cross Country Running

CROSS country running is coming to be recognized as one of the major winter sports at the University. In the fall of 1906 it was instituted by Coach H. B. Conibear as a substitute for indoor gymnasium work. This method of securing "gym" credits proved popular from the first, and since that time there has been an ever-increasing interest in it, particularly in the two under classes.

To further stimulate interest in cross country a series of three interclass races have been held each year, with the exception of the fall of 1908, when only two races were run.

In the fall of 1907 W. B. Hutchinson Co., Seattle merchants, offered a handsome cup to be competed for by the classes. The conditions were that it should be given to the class winning the highest number of points in three years. The object was to entice men to turn out in their junior and senior years, when there was not the added incentive of credits for the work.

In the cup races of 1907 the class of 1909 won 253 points; class of 1910, 972 points, and class of 1911, 760 points. In the first race of 1908 the class of 1909 secured 71 points, the class of 1910, 276 points, class of 1911, 259 points, and the class of 1912, 193 points. In the second race 1909 was not entered. The class of 1910 won 256 points, class of 1911, 218 points, and class of 1912, 280 points.

The total points for the years 1907 and 1908 are: Class of 1909, 324 points; class of 1910, 1504 points; class of 1911, 1237 points; class of 1912, 473 points.

ED. HUGHES, Captain 1908.

Intercollegiate Baseball

WHETHER it is the multiplicity of athletic events which occur in the spring, or a lack of support by the student-body, baseball has not in recent years attracted much attention as an intercollegiate sport at the University of Washington. Out of a series of nine intercollegiate games last year only four were won by the Varsity.

The season was begun with two games with Whitworth College. The first, at Tacoma, April 25, resulted in a victory for Washington, by a score of 14 to 7. The second game, played on the campus, May 2, was won by a score of 4 to 2. After a few practice games with the local high schools and with Fort Flagler, the team left for Eastern Washington.

In the 1908 season Professor W. M. Dehn coached the squad. February 25, 1909, Coach Dehn was re-elected, and "Dode" Brinker, a former baseball star at the University, was made associate coach. Professor Dehn volunteered his services in 1908 under great personal sacrifice in hopes of assisting in developing a creditable nine.

The first college game was with Idaho. It was played in the rain and mud, and was closely contested, Washington winning by 13 to 11. A series of games was played with the Washington State College. The first game was played in Pullman and the other two in Spokane. Washington was unable to hit the State College pitcher, and the team work was erratic. One game was won by Washington. Pullman's team enjoyed remarkable success last season, Washington being the only college which won from them.

The next series of three games with Whitman College resulted disastrously for Washington. The team was tired from the trip, and the pitchers were out of condition. The best form was shown in the second game, when Washington really had a chance of winning. The other two games were very decided victories for Whitman.

The Japan Trip

THE Varsity baseball team, consisting of eleven men and the writer, left Seattle for Japan August 18, 1908, on the Tosa Maru, of the Nippon Yusen Kaisha Line. The trip across was rather uneventful, being made in the finest of weather, and all being in excellent health.

We landed in Yokohama September 3, and were met by Professor Abe, the physical director of Waseda University, and by Mr. W. K. Siyuki, a former Japanese student at Washington, who was acting as our advance agent. The next day we went to Tokyo, and were received by the students of Waseda and Keio and escorted in jinrikishas to the Tokyo Hotel, situated in the center of the city on an elevation called Ataga Yama.

Our first game was scheduled to take place on the 19th, so we had plenty of time to practice.

The first day we were much surprised to find awaiting us at the grounds about two thousand people, mostly students, who had come out in order to get some idea of the comparative strength of the teams. We were so stage struck that we didn't practice as long as we intended. Soon, however, we got so used to the crowds that we were disappointed if they did not come.

We rested three days, then took a short trip to Nikko, the great temple site of Japan, as the guests of Mr. Furuya, the Japanese merchant of Seattle. This was one of the finest visits we had while in Japan. While there we met several American tourists. We attended a Japanese theatre a few nights afterwards, by invitation of the proprietor. The theatre is built on about the same style as those in America except that instead of having chairs, the floor space is divided into squares, or boxes, in which the people sit. Around each box is a flat railing on which are placed the teapots—for the Japanese drink tea during the performance. Ushers conducted us to chairs in the first balcony, prepared especially for us. We could not understand much about the play, but the acting and scenery interested us a great deal.

The first game was played a week later, under very unfavorable conditions, on a wet ground and in cold, cloudy weather. Nevertheless, nearly seven thousand people turned out to see the game. As soon as we stepped inside the gate the yell leaders got busy and reeled off yell after yell, some of them reminding us of "Oskey, Wow! Wow!" This continued all through the game, which ended 4 to 2 in our favor. The Japanese team was good in fielding but poor at batting.

The following Wednesday we lost to Waseda by 6 to 3, and Keio University took the next two games by 2 to 1 and 4 to 3. Keio had the strongest team we met in Japan. These defeats all came in a bunch, and we determined to pull out of the rut. This we did by defeating Waseda the second time by 4 to 1. But Keio again won the next day by 3 to 2.

Yokohama was our next move, where we won three games, two with the Yokohama Athletic Club, by the scores of 14 to 3 and 6 to 3, and the third with the Commercial College by a 4 to 1 score.

Our last game was with Waseda, played three days before starting home. It was the best game ever seen in Japan, according to the papers. It lasted fifteen innings, ending in a score of 5 to 3 in our favor. That evening after the game we were royally entertained by Count Okuma, the great Japanese diplomat, who showed us about his garden and magnificent mansion. Afterwards another banquet was served us.

We arrived home October 25, all in good health and feeling that we had had one of the greatest trips that any college team had ever taken. The line-up of our team was as follows:

Roy Brown, Catcher.
Earl Brown, Pitcher.
Huber Grimm, Pitcher.
Edward Hughes (Capt.), Pitcher.
Webster Hoover, First Base.
Arthur Hammerland, Second Base.

Walter Meagher, Short Stop.

HOMER KIRBY, Captain 1908.

NEVER in the history of the University of Washington has the crew had a more successful season than that of 1908. Its success, however, was not marked by a series of victories on the water—for we had but a single race, with California—but by the spirit of the men who turned out to make a winning crew and by the generous support of the student-body and the public generally.

After a training season extending over a period of six months, Washington met and decisively defeated, on June 2, the fast crew of the University of California, which a few weeks previously had just as decisively defeated Stanford University.

The defeat of California placed the second star in the championship banner of Washington. We are now entering upon the third year of eight-oared rowing on the Pacific Coast with 165 men turning out regularly for work. Washington has made a mighty stride toward the goal of her ambition, to become the "Cornell of the Pacific." Her rowing traditions have a broad foundation upon which to become fixed.

The future of rowing is particularly bright. All natural advantages lend themselves to its development. The lake washes the east border of the campus, and the climate is so mild that it permits of continuous winter training on the water, an advantage enjoyed by few colleges. Our navy is better and larger than ever before. The A. S. U. W. now owns a coaching launch, two eight-oared shells, two eight-oared barges, one four-oared barge, and one four-oared shell. With a constantly growing equipment, a place to train second to none in the United States, an ever increasing spirit for rowing in the student-body, and a coach in whom we all place explicit faith and confidence, Washington bids fair to become the premier rowing institution in the United States.

California vs. Washington

MORE ideal conditions for a great intercollegiate boat race could not have been wished for than those which greeted the well trained oarsmen of California and Washington on the afternoon of June 2, 1908. The weather was perfect. The early morning was dark and threatening, with a slight breeze which kicked up a choppy sea, but toward noon the breeze fell and the lake subsided into a glassy surface. Shortly before the race the afternoon sun broke out from behind the clouds, revealing a riot of color dotting the lake and shore. Thousands of spectators lined the banks, and every advantage point was taken long before the hour of the race. Every available pleasure craft on the lake was pressed into service to carry the excited students to the start at Leschi Park. In spite of the crowding of steamers, launches and small boats, the course was kept open by the police boat, and when the crews squared around for the start a wide expanse of clear water stretching away to the finish, three miles off, greeted the coxswains.

The wait was not long. After a moment of maneuvering the two shells lined up true and at the crack of the starter's gun they were off.

Simultaneously the long oars of both shells caught the water—Washington with a truer stroke keeping slightly in front for the first ten seconds. Then as Washington dropped her stroke to thirty-seven, while California still maintained her starting stroke of forty to the minute, the blue and gold boat forged ahead. After the first minute Captain Kirby dropped the stroke to thirty-four, and it was at this pace that most of the race was rowed. Captain Witter continued to hold the California stroke at forty, but after two or three minutes the furious pace began to tell upon his men, and the stroke slowly dropped.

At the first mile buoy California led by three-quarters of a length, rowing at thirty-eight. Washington's long, easy stroke of thirty-four, with its powerful drive, began to tell, and with only a slight increase in the stroke she steadily passed her rivals.

Washington led by three lengths at the second mile, and it was apparent to all that the spurts which Captain Witter called for were fruitless.

In the last minute, displaying beautiful form, Washington ran the stroke up to thirty-seven, flashing across the finish winner of the Pacific Coast intercollegiate rowing championship by five and one-half lengths. The time was 17 minutes and 10 seconds. Amid the deafening noise of steam whistles and thousands of shrieking spectators, both crews rowed leisurely back to the Varsity boat house.

The American Henley Idea

BY PROFESSOR MERLE THORPE.

EACH university in the country, I suppose, has some one advantage, natural or otherwise, over other like institutions. Chicago is not handicapped by lack of money, George Washington derives benefits from the many jurists and statesmen who make the nation's capital their home. Harvard has its traditions, and Berkeley boasts an unusually pretty campus. Those institutions that realize their advantages, prosper; "at Cornell, where they row," is an example at hand. Few—especially is it true of the new universities—grasp this opportunity early and profit by it. A Washington man deploring the lack of college spirit longs for Stanford's isolated campus, while the same day a Stanford man in a letter to me wailed for Washington's climate and magnificent waterfront.

So it goes. The American Henley idea, advanced by the "Washington Alumnus," is a plea for Washington to utilize its advantages in its climate and Lake Washington. Princeton spent half a million digging a lake, which is a frog pond compared to our own magnificent body of water. In rowing, not football, not baseball, nor track, not in anything else, will the University of Washington become famous throughout the United States. Nor is it in intercollegiate rowing that the greatest gain is to be found, but rather in intracollegiate contests, class against class, department against department, fraternity against fraternity, and school against school. After preliminary regattas during the year, there should be one big regatta day in the spring. In time this day would attract Washington's alumni from all over. It would be the one college event in the Northwest, and with a dozen or so of record-breaking races, it would soon be looked upon by the entire country as a unique institution in American university life. Later, it would be no trouble to bring Eastern and Southern crews to Washington for a national contest, or an American Henley.

The problem of the American university today is play ground and play for all students. Everywhere is the idea that there must be some outdoor sport for every student in the university gaining ground. Washington has its play ground in Lake Washington, and its climate allows its students to play there the year around. Rowing is recognized as an ideal sport for both men and women. This is the University of Washington's one advantage, an advantage coveted by all other institutions, and by which it should profit. Students have been quick to see this opportunity, and the activity in rowing circles this year shows that they appreciate the benefits to be gained by taking advantage of Washington's natural resources.

TENNIS

MARK WOODIN.

BERT HANSEN.

WITH the tennis games last spring between Oregon, Pullman and Washington, the opening wedge was made for the establishment of intercollegiate tennis as a permanent sport in the Northwest. Previous to this time all the colleges of the Northwest had their tennis clubs for the advancement of the sport, but none had ventured to include it in their list of intercollegiate sports. With the growth of the different institutions the demand for this branch of athletics has increased, until last spring arrangements were made for the first intercollegiate tennis tournament. Only the three institutions, Oregon, Washington, and Washington State College, were included in this tournament, which was held on the 29th and 30th of May, 1908.

Each college entered a team for the doubles and singles, Oregon carrying off the palm in the singles, and W. S. C. in the doubles. The beginning made last spring is indicative of greater and more extensive tournaments in the future. The game is now on a firm basis and bids fair to take its proper place among the college sports.

Mayberry Davis and E. C. Galbraith, of Washington State College, won the Northwest intercollegiate tennis championship in the doubles by defeating both Oregon and Washington. The first game was played on the 29th of May with the University of Washington. The score stood 6-0, 6-3, 2-6, and 8-6. Washington was represented by Mark Wodin, '11, and Bert Hansen, '09.

Saturday, May 30th, Charles McCnow and Gerald Eastborn, of Oregon, were defeated by the Pullman team by a score of 6-3, 4-6, 8-0, 2-6, and 6-1. The Washington State team put up a steady, consistent game, always playing the ball safe, and thus won from the two opposing teams, who, while they played far more brilliant at times, fell down at the critical stages of the game. Charles McCnow, of Oregon, won the championship in the singles by defeating T. H. Judd, Pullman's representative, in three straight sets; score, 8-6, 6-1, and 8-6, and by also defeating Adair Rembert, '08, of Washington, in a close match, the score being 6-3, 6-4, 3-6, and 6-3. McCnow played a steady, finished game, showing excellent judgment in his return, playing all the corners and keeping his opponent on the run. His net playing was a feature.

Northwest Conference Report

AGREEMENT

Between

University of Idaho, University of Oregon, Oregon Agricultural College, University of Washington, Washington State College and Whitman College.

PREAMBLE.

THIS AGREEMENT, Made and entered into this 30th day of December, 1908, by and between the institutions subscribed hereto is for the purpose of determining and regulating all athletic contests that shall take place between representatives of the several institutions party hereto and shall be binding upon said institutions for the period of two years from and after the date of taking effect hereof.

RULES OF ELIGIBILITY.

1. No student who has participated in any branch of intercollegiate athletics during four previous seasons shall represent any institution in this conference in that branch of athletics.
2. No student who has participated in intercollegiate games or contests of any kind during five previous years shall represent any institution in this conference in any intercollegiate game or contest. For the purpose of this rule, a year shall be counted from September to September, if the student's first participation occurred in the fall semester, or from February to February, if the student's first participation occurred in the spring semester.
3. No student who has less than 12 Carnegie units of entrance credits shall represent any institution in this conference in any intercollegiate game or contest. This rule shall not debar preparatory students now eligible before September 1st, 1909.
4. No student who has participated in the intercollegiate athletics of an institution granting a bachelor's degree and offering work beyond 16 Carnegie units of high school grade, shall represent any institution in this conference in any intercollegiate game or contest until he shall have been a student of that institution at least one college year. This rule shall go into effect September 1st, 1909.
5. No student shall represent his institution in any intercollegiate game or contest unless he has carried satisfactorily, since registration, at least three-quarters of the regular work required by his institution.

6. No student shall represent his institution in any intercollegiate game or contest who has total delinquencies on his previous record in that institution equivalent to one-half of the full amount of prescribed work for any semester.

7. No student shall represent his institution in any intercollegiate game or contest who registers later than 21 days after the first day set for registration in the semester in which he desires to compete.

8. Bona fide students who are carrying the required amount of work shall not be debarred from athletics because they are working to earn part of their expenses and receiving no more than ordinary compensation for their services.

9. No student shall represent an athletic club or organization other than his institution from the opening of the fall semester to the close of the spring semester.

AMATEUR RULE.

10. No student shall compete in any athletic contest in this conference who is not an amateur.

11. An amateur is a person who has never competed for money or other valuable consideration, under a false name, or with or against a professional, or who has not at any time taught, pursued or assisted at athletic exercises for money or other valuable consideration. Nothing in this definition shall be construed to prohibit competition between amateurs for medals or trophies of a similar nature. It is hereby expressly declared that this definition is not retroactive prior to date of Commencement, 1908, at the several institutions.

12. Nothing in this rule shall be construed to prohibit the acceptance by an amateur of his necessary traveling expenses incurred as a contestant or official in going to and from any place for an amateur contest.

13. The disposing of any medal or trophy for a consideration shall be considered evidence of professionalism.

14. No student shall be eligible to participate in intercollegiate athletics who has taken advantage of any reduction of fees, scholarships or other financial advantages, except upon the basis of competitive examination or other basis open on the same terms to non-athletic students.

15. Any student who, at any time, has lost his amateur standing, may be reinstated by the faculty committee on athletics of his institution after the completion of one year of satisfactory college work subsequent to the date of such loss.

ENFORCEMENT.

16. All questions in regard to eligibility and amateur standing or reinstatement of an athlete are to be referred to his own faculty committee on athletics, whose decision shall be final.

SECRETARY.

17. A secretary shall be elected by the conference to serve for the period of two years. He shall, giving two weeks' notice, call a meeting of the conference to be held between December 1st and December 31st, 1910, at such place as the conference shall designate. A special meeting may be called at any other time upon the written request of three of the institutions of the conference.

18. In the event of the failure of the secretary to issue any such proper call, the chairman of the athletic committee of the institution which he represents shall issue the call.

REPRESENTATION.

19. Each institution shall be represented in meetings of the conference by a person or persons authorized to act with authority for both faculty and student body. Each institution shall have one vote in such meetings.

MEMBERSHIP.

20. Any institution may become a member of this conference by making application to the secretary and subscribing to the articles of agreement, upon the unanimous consent in writing of the members of the conference

CERTIFIED LISTS.

21. Certified lists of the players who are eligible for any contest shall be prepared and forwarded by the chairman of the athletic committee of each institution participating, to the chairman of the faculty athletic committee of each of the competing institutions at least ten days prior to date of such contest.

AMENDMENTS.

22. A change in the articles of agreement of this conference shall be declared adopted by the secretary upon the filing of written approval by each institution in the conference.

DATE OF TAKING EFFECT.

23. Except as otherwise provided in the articles themselves, this agreement shall take effect in each institution immediately after its signature and filing with the secretary.

INTERPRETATIONS AND DEFINITIONS.

24. Participation. The term "participation" as applied to a student shall mean the representation of his institution in an intercollegiate game or contest or any part of such game or contest.

25. Intercollegiate Contest. The term "intercollegiate contest" shall mean an athletic game or contest between teams representing institutions granting a bachelor's degree and offering work beyond 16 Carnegie units of high school grade.

26. College Year. A "college year" shall be interpreted as meaning two full semesters of attendance.

27. Delinquencies. A "delinquency" shall be defined as any subject in which either a report of "condition," "failed" or "incomplete," or their equivalent, has been made.

The fact that a student is repeating the work of a delinquent subject shall not be considered as removing the delinquency.

A passing grade must be obtained in that subject before such delinquency can be considered as removed.

In the case of a student changing his general course of work and having delinquencies in the former course in a subject not required for graduation in the new course, such delinquencies shall not affect his athletic eligibility, provided that the faculty athletic committee of his institution approve his change of course and that he has done satisfactorily one semester's work in all the subjects assigned in the new course.

28. Playing Professional Teams. It shall not be considered as a violation of an amateur rule for a conference team to compete against a professional team, provided that the faculty athletic committee of the institution sanction such game or contest.

RESOLUTION.

WHEREAS, students of an institution frequently out of a mistaken sense of loyalty conceal from their faculty athletic committee the fact that promising athletes of their own college have rendered themselves ineligible, and

WHEREAS, such knowledge or evidence may come into the possession of the faculty committee or students of another conference institution, and

WHEREAS, the faculty athletic committee of the institution which the student desires to represent is the court of last resort in determining the status of their students, and

WHEREAS, the publication of exaggerated and garbled accounts of such rumors or facts creates unfriendly feelings in rival institutions and detracts from the dignity and worth of the institution in the public mind,

IT IS HEREBY EXPRESSLY RESOLVED that it is the duty of any faculty athletic committee or student in any institution into whose possession such information or evidence may come, to forward the same at once to the faculty committee of the institution involved, and

IT IS AGREED that all publication or circulation of such evidence shall be, as far as possible, prevented until the faculty committee of the institution involved shall have had sufficient opportunity to investigate and decide the questions submitted.

This resolution shall be published with the conference rules for the information of all persons interested.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the several institutions have hereunto set their signatures by their duly accredited representatives in this conference this 30th day of December, 1908

:: Women's Rowing ::

WOMEN'S rowing at the University to-day is due largely to Captain Dick Gloster, of the 'Varsity, Coach H. B. Conibear, and to the co-eds who turned out in the "wee hours of the morning" in the spring of 1906. Many a time these enthusiasts left home without breakfast to catch the first car for the "U" and there master the methodical stroke!—stroke! To them the women to-day owe much for the establishment of rowing as a permanent sport.

That stage in the progress of rowing must not be forgotten when the women rowed on stationary seats in the boathouse before being trusted in the barges. The result of careful training was clearly demonstrated on Junior Day of 1908, when one of the prettiest races ever witnessed was pulled off upon Union Bay between the underclassmen.

The Freshmen crew, with a splendid start, held the lead until the finish, crossing the line a quarter of a boat length in advance of the Sophomores, who were fighting every inch of the way. A beautiful stroke was maintained by both crews over the entire course.

The crews were made up as follows:

How Co-Eds Play the National Game

HAD you passed the women's athletic field last spring at some opportune time you might have seen a lively and unique game of baseball by the co-eds. And they played it after the regulation rules, too, except, of course, when it suited the fair players to fudge a little.

At first there were plenty of aspiring ball players. Then sore arms and shoulders, the result of too ardent fancy twirling of the sphere, together with the usual summons of spring fever, soon minimized the number to an inadequate few, and one-old-cat was in order.

Their chief delight was in stealing bases, thus demonstrating to their fair companions that, after all, theft may be rewarded. An ability to sprint was developed in traveling around the diamond. With what an air of pride a co-ed would cross the plate, adding one more point to the score. But the greatest feat was to strike the ball. And when this was accomplished, the amazed "batter in" usually stood glued to the home plate instead of fleeing nimbly for first base.

On a whole, the women found baseball a delightful recreation, even if they were a little deficient in playing, and it gave them a deeper appreciation of the fine points of the game. This spring may bring even better results.

Hockey

Victoria vs. Washington.

HOCKEY made its initial appearance on the University campus last spring, when the co-eds adopted it to supplant part of their gymnasium work. About twenty women played. Much credit for the introduction and maintenance of the sport is due Norman Waterhouse of the Seattle Hockey Club. Mr. Waterhouse coached and drilled the women in the fine points of the game and was instrumental in arranging a contest with the Victoria, B. C., Women's Hockey Club, the meet being held Saturday, April 25.

Though inexperienced in the sport, the University team put up a good showing and were only prevented from scoring by the remarkable skill of the visitors' goal keeper. However, most of the game was played in Washington's territory, and Victoria ran up a score of six to nothing against the home team. The 'Varsity line-up was: Martina Henehan, goal; Milnora Roberts, Ada Etsell, fullbacks; Mary Losee, Verna Abbott, Catherine Helenbrand, halfbacks; Helen Tillman, Nora Crow, Nita Cunningham, Margaret Corbett and Mrs. F. E. Johnson, forwards.

Another team has been organized for hockey playing this spring, and meets will be held with Seattle and outside clubs.

ADA ETSSELL, 'Varsity Woman Champion.

ANOTHER sport entered into with great spirit by some of our University women is tennis. As yet they have no coach in the department, but the women practice consistently with a view towards making the game ultimately intercollegiate. Interclass and interclub matches were held last year.

Some trouble was met with last spring to get a suitable court to hold the tournaments, but finally the faculty were induced to part with their court for the season. Bad weather, too, put a damper on the preparations several times.

But at last May 27 was set for the date, the finals to be played rain or shine—periodic showers prevailed. A handsome silver trophy cup was offered by the Lawrence L. Moore Co. to the winner of the all-college singles. To the successful contestant in the Freshman-Sophomore match another trophy, a "Sutton" racquet, was given by Miss Milnora Roberts.

The tournament did not draw a large crowd because of the bad weather, those who did attend being obliged to seek shelter under the grandstands, where tea was served during the afternoon by Misses Williams, Wold and Henkins.

Though the contestants did not exhibit real classy tournament form, they showed a marked improvement over that of the year before. Ada Etsell, '10, won in the all-college entry from Christine Kanters, '09, by scores of 6-4 and 9-7. Miss Etsell, as champion, was awarded the trophy cup. Hattie Palmer, '11, took the prize racquet in the Freshman-Sophomore contest, from Rossae Swartz, '10, by 6-3 and 6-3. Further tournaments on a larger scale are planned for the 1909 season.

Women's Aim in Athletics

IT IS the desire of the University to do for its women in the physical culture department as much really artistic as well as practical work as can possibly be accomplished in the two years granted it in the curriculum. To this end the following aims are essayed: First, not only to improve but also to maintain the health of the women; second, to show them how so to conserve their energy as to create in them skill, grace, confidence and endurance.

That the young women have a better knowledge of the laws of health and that they have observed them so well, is due largely to the series of helpful, earnest and inspiring talks given by Dr. Maud Parker, a graduate of the University, and a practicing physician of Seattle. Dr. Parker not only gave these talks to the women students in lectures, but with painstaking care she also conferred with each young woman separately, giving her special advice; thus many who were too timid to seek consultation outside were led to understand the necessity of observing the more common laws of health.

Our climate is such that outdoor exercise can be indulged in throughout nearly the whole year. Since coming to the Coast it has been my ambition, as physical director of the women at the University, to have an outdoor gymnasium. The nearest approach to the realization of this ambition is an oval, cleared a year ago last campus day and finished the next fall. This oval so kindly provided for by the campus day squad is enclosed by a high wire netting and contains three tennis courts. Until the winter rains began all classes were held in this place, the students dressing in the gymnasium and carrying out their wands, dumbbells, clubs and other paraphernalia for their drill exercises. In rainy weather the work was confined to calisthenics, gymnastic games, light apparatus work, fancy steps, and aesthetic dancing in the regular gymnasium. Just before the outdoor work was begun an exhibition of the regular class work was given.

Such has been heretofore the regularly scheduled gymnasium work. What we are looking forward to is the open air gymnasium. It rests with the student-body as to whether this will ever be realized.

Another feature of women's athletics is rowing. Several class crews have been organized and on such occasions as Junior Day aquatic contests are held. The sport is extremely popular and excellent physical culture is being obtained. The girls row whether it is raining or shining. This year crews are being formed in all four classes. Keenest rivalry has existed between the Sophomore ('11) and Junior ('10) crews.

Venite, Washington!

On eastern slopes the shadows fall, the long day nears its close,
And softly o'er the silent sea the newborn west wind blows;
Far-sunning isles uplift their heads and greet the light of day,
And from their palms the echoes borne in fancy seem to say:

Oh, 'Varsity, fair 'Varsity,
We wait for thee alone;
Across the brine the world is thine,
Venite, Washington!

The jackals skulk among the grass where Oxford once was seen,
And reptiles crawl along the wall where Cambridge graced the green,
Neglected they in whirl of time, neglected and forgot,
Till naught but ruins stand today to mark the lonely spot.

But 'Varsity, fair 'Varsity,
Beneath the setting sun,
Of endless fame shall be thy name,
Venite, Washington!

Strong hearts and true that know no fear whatever may betide,
Shall build for thee, fair 'Varsity, where'er their lot abide;
And rising suns shall shed thy light where never ray hath shone,
Till east and west shall hail thee bless'd, Our Ma'er, Washington.

Oh 'Varsity, fair 'Varsity,
Wher'er our course is run,
For thee, for thee, our prayers shall be Venite, Washington!

“Amateur Night,” an exhibition of University vaudeville talent, was one of the events given under the auspices of the Women’s League during the past year for the purpose of raising funds to furnish the building which the association will obtain from the buildings which will accrue to the University after the A.-Y.-P. The Men's Club of the University of Washington is an organization designed primarily for the development of broader acquaintanceship and fellowship among the men students, faculty members and alumni of the University. The purpose of the Club, as stated in the constitution, is as follows: "To further the best interests of the University of Washington, to upbuild and foster a proper college loyalty, to establish a closer acquaintance and comradeship among the men of the University, and to provide and maintain a club house for its members."

Thus far the Club has not been conducted as an active organization, owing to the fact that no club building has been available. The association, however, has been placed upon a substantial basis by incorporating under the state laws, and by enlisting as members several hundred students, faculty and alumni. Definite plans are on foot whereby the Men's Club will secure an appropriate residence for club purposes from the many buildings which will revert to the University at the close of the A.-Y.-P. Exposition.

The University Book Store has only been operated a few years, yet has had an interesting growth. Although hampered by want of capital and by lack of sufficient room, a $25,000 business was done this college year. This is two and a half times the amount of business transacted two years ago.

It has proven an indirect benefit to students by the accommodation it affords; and a direct benefit by giving them superior facilities and better prices.

The Book Store is strictly co-operative, being owned and controlled by all the regularly registered students in the University. Every time a student buys from this store he patronizes his own enterprise. The management is simply hired by the student-body to act as their agents of accommodation.

"My task was to co-operate
Rather than play the rival."

Chelan County Club

Organized 1907.

President	W. P. THOMAS
Vice-President	L. P. KELLOGG
Secretary	MYRTLE WHALEY

The Chelan County Club has a dual purpose. Its primary object is to boost for the University of Washington in Chelan County and to encourage students from that district to attend the University. Last year the club was instrumental in establishing the Big Red Apple Scholarship of $200 to be annually given to the most deserving student graduating from the Wenatchee High School. The first scholarship was awarded to Fred Hamilton.

The second purpose of the Chelan County Club is to develop friendship and acquaintance among Chelan County students and with students in clubs of similar nature in the University. A big Apple-Fest was given by the Club early in the present year, to which all of the other boosting clubs were invited. Membership in the Club numbers twenty-four.

In the spring and early summer months it has been the custom of the band for the past two years to give open-air concerts on the campus several evenings a month. Last year these concerts reached a gratifyingly high degree of excellency. It was the good fortune of the band to have excellent weather during these open-air concerts, and hundreds of students and visitors gathered on the green campus to listen. Extensive plans are being formulated for concerts this summer.

— The Choruses —

SOMETHING of an innovation was introduced in University musical circles this year, when the time-honored Men's and Women's Glee Clubs were dispensed with and two choruses instituted instead. These choruses have been open to all who possess sufficient musical talent, their object being the cultivation of a love for what is best musically, as well as for training in reading. Both choruses are organized, having officers, and all the requirements for permanency and regularity of attendance.

The Women's Chorus has as President Annabel Johnstone; Vice-President, Ruth Anderson; Secretary-Treasurer, Elizabeth Searle. Rosemary Georgeson is representative to the Mozart Club.

The officers of the Men's Chorus are Henry Filer, President; A. G. Jackson, Vice-President; Fred Sutton, Secretary, and Carl Norris, Treasurer.

Neither chorus has a regular schedule of performance, nor is an attempt made to appear a great number of times. Both have sung in Assembly, and the women appeared with the Schubert Club in Seattle, Saturday, March 6. Both choruses took part in the musical festival at the opening of the Auditorium April 15, 1909.

The Mozart Club

The Mozart Club is a musical organization composed of all the other musical organizations in school—Band, Orchestra, Men's and Women's Choruses. Henry Filer, Grace Zimmerman, Helen Tillman and Stewart Perry are the officers. Meetings are held frequently, an effort being made to interest all musicians in college in one or another line of musical activity.

LITERARY

POST-MORTEM

(First Prize Story.)

I HADN'T lived in the frat house twenty-four hours before the fellows had given me most of the information they considered vitally necessary to a Freshman—how many cuts a man could have without getting canned, the best way to work the coach so as to get on the team, what co-eds were and how much it cost to take shares in one, and finally who Post-Mortem was and why.

It took some time to go through the list doing justice to each, and it was the next morning before we'd gotten to the last. We were all sitting around the big fire-place, where a little blaze was hanging on to a log sort of careless like, and when they told how Otto Schmeling acquired his title we howled until the air vibrations put the fire out.

It seems that Arthur Van Arsdale when coming out from town one afternoon on a crowded car kept feeling a rhythmic little nudge on the back of his six-inch collar. If he had known that it was accompanied by a rapidly increasing smudge of blackberry juice I don't know what his emotions would have been, for Van was the college fashion-plate—the fellows called him Prince Ferdinand. As it was, he turned none too sweetly to see an old woman with country written in capitals all over her clothes, and a big newspaper-wrapped bundle in her hand.

"I was sure you didn't know there was a lady standing behind you," she said, beaming upon poor Van as he got up to offer her his seat. Then she happened to notice one of the Prince's books that he'd taken down town with him as a bluff, and continued, sociably, "Oh, you go to college? Then maybe you know Otto Schmeling from Silverton?"

"I think I've heard the name somewhere," fibbed Van, politely, though smiling to himself at the idea that he could ever know anybody named Schmeling. "Is he a Freshman?"

"No, he isn't a Freshman," answered the old woman, with umbrage in her tone. "Otto finished the regular college work under a tooter up at Silverton, and now he's taking a post-mortem course in law."

A post-mortem course in law! Van hugged himself at the thought of the story he would have to tell at dinner that evening. But he's a polite chap, the Prince is, as I've learned since, and he looked down at the old woman for all the world like a sympathetic graven image.

"Don't you even know your friend's address?" he asked. "Hadn't you better let me help you find him?"

You see, Van had made up his mind that he couldn't miss the chance of seeing a fellow named Schmeling who was taking a post-mortem course in law. And he did see him. Then men say that he came home about five, staggered into the hall, fell into a chair, and moaned out:

"Such a glory of hair of the truly Titian shade! I think he cuts it himself—it's as much too long in spots as his trousers are too short. And he's an orphan, and he studies with his feet on the mantel, and wears no shoes in the sacred privacy of his own room. And he offered me a piece of blackberry pie that came all the way from Silverton. He is six feet several, and he stutters, and O, my friends, his name is Schmeling!"

When the fellows were finally convinced that this was one of Van's discoveries, and not the logical result of his trip downtown, they demanded in chorus to be taken to Otto Schmeling immediately. It was all the chivalrous Prince could do to keep them from invading the six by eight apartment, and carrying away the red-haired, shoeless orphan. As a compromise, he promised to point out Post-Mortem to them the next day on the campus. And here the fellows paused significantly, and said they would point Post-Mortem out to me the next day on the campus.

They did. Better than that, it was my luck to enroll in one of Otto Schmeling's Freshman Law classes. I shall never forget him as he used to look when he rose to recite. He would clasp his big hands together piously, cast his eyes down like a bashful maiden in the presence of her steady, and stammer out the answer. That it was usually the right answer never occurred to the delighted class. Even the Dean used to crack sly jokes at his expense. As for the fellows——

"You may recite on torts, Mr. Schmeling," the Dean once said.

"I d-didn't get to t-tarts," Otto Schmeling answered, pronouncing the word as if it were a bit of pastry.

"Then tell us about blackberry pie," whispered the man behind him. Half the fellows in the Law School had heard the Prince's story, and referred to Schmeling as Post-Mortem.

Otto Schmeling was eternally good-natured through it all. Outside of classes he kept a great deal to his room, studying hard, drinking cheap beer we suspected, and smoking atrocious tobacco we were sure. No one knew anything further about him except another Freshman Law student, Jack Stewart, who came from the same little town, and shared the same little room. How on earth he stood it we certainly couldn't see, for Jack wasn't cut out by the Post-Mortem pattern. He was a good-looking, dashing, clever chap—poor, of course, but that didn't matter much while there wasn't one snob in the old college. We were interested in him from the first. And then one day he made a brilliant speech in a mock trial, with only two hours' notice. The old Dean compared it to the earlier efforts of Patrick Henry, and it really was a crack speech. Knowing all the time that it was a mock trial and a joke, and being besides an attorney for the other side, I yelled with the others when he sat down.

Half of the frats of the college rushed Jack after this, and we were quite set up when he decided to join us. We got up a big feed in honor of the event. We were wondering what to do to make it out of the ordinary, and someone proposed that we invite Post-Mortem as a howling good joke.

He came. We meant to have some fun out of him but to keep within the limits, we did honestly. But after Post-Mortem drank his bouillon under the impression, I suppose, that it was tea, we lost control of ourselves. In the salad course they brought him a big plate of sauer-kraut, and in place of coffee he had a cup of hot beer, and was asked whether he took it with or without cream and sugar. But the climax came when John Glover called for toasts.

"I give you Otto Schmeling!" he cried. "Here's to Post-Mortem! Drink him down!"

Schmeling's face was worth seeing as he heard his title for the first time. Before he recovered from the shock, the man next Glover arose and said solemnly:

"You may break, you may shatter the stein, if you will,
But Schmeling will cling to it still."

The men all laughed uproariously. I tried to think of something clever, for I came right after Stewart, who was next in order. The fellows were all leaning forward in their eagerness to learn what this gifted speaker would find to say. At last Jack got up, looking rather apologetic, I thought, and said:

"Here's to Post-Mortem! Once a farmer, always a farmer."

Not so brilliant after all. I was about to give my response with more assurance when Post-Mortem forestalled me. He got up awkwardly, and stood looking at us for a moment. Then he said, slowly:

"It is time I went home; it is getting late."

Before we could stop him, he was gone. Phillips ran out after him shouting to him to come back, and asking if he couldn't take a joke, but he didn't answer. It made us feel deucedly foolish, a thing like that happening in our own house. We had meant to be so nice to Post-Mortem as soon as we were through having fun with him. As Asher said, the fellow was a beast to spoil the evening that way.

Stewart didn't come down to eight o'clock breakfast the next morning, and one of the fellows who'd gotten up early to dig into a Chem review said he'd gone out about six. While we were still at the table he came in.

"Say, Jack!" called some one. "Don't you know it's against the rules of this frat to get up before eight on Saturdays?"

Stewart didn't seem to hear. He just looked at us, his face white and scared.

"Fellows," he said, slowly, "Otto Schmeling's drowned himself, and it's my fault."

"Drowned himself? When? How do you know? Your fault? What do you mean?" we cried, in excited chorus.

Stewart held out a scrap of paper. Ed. Stirling took it and we all crowded around him. It said merely, "Good-by, old chap," and there was an order authorizing Jack to draw Schmeling's money at the bank.

Stewart broke the dead silence.

"That's the kind of a fellow he was," he said, brokenly. "I couldn't tell you all that Otto Schmeling has done for me. He helped me get ready for college. He was paying my expenses with money that he should have used for himself. He wrote that mock trial speech. He insisted upon my accepting your invitation into the frat. And last night I laughed with you at him!"

Jack had been a sneak and a coward, but there wasn't one of us who felt disposed to be hard upon him just then. We could feel the mark of Cain breaking out on our own brows. Our actions of the night before seemed utterly odious now. What a hero poor old Schmeling had been! We would not even think of him as Post-Mortem; the name was too gruesomely suggestive.

When Stewart could control his voice, he told us that a remark made by Schmeling when the two were out boating a few days before made him sure that it was by drowning that Otto had ended his life. At the time Jack had looked on it as a joke, but now he saw that it was a morbid intimation of what was to follow. We felt that the least we could do was to take steps for the recovery of the body and to give it a decent burial. It was necessary to explain the whole sorrowful affair to the President in order to get permission to drag the lake. He didn't say much, but we came out of the office wishing ourselves in Schmeling's place.

I hope I may never again pass such days as that Saturday and Sunday. From daylight to dark we were out on the lake, meeting with constant disappointment, holding ourselves in constant expectation of what would be worse than disappointment. We refused all offers of assistance from the other frats and colleges. We wanted to do that much for Schmeling ourselves.

Saturday night most of us lay awake till morning, seeing all manner of horrors. We didn't even go home for lunch Sunday, but worked as long as we were able to see. Then we hurried away silently, worn-out, distracted. We were passing Schmeling's lodging place before anyone spoke.

"Look, fellows! There's a light up there."

There certainly was a light in what had been Schmeling's room. We couldn't understand it. Had someone else found the body, then, during the day? We filed up grimly, led by Jack Stewart, who still had his key to the house. At the door we hesitated, filled with foreboding. Then someone threw it open.

By the fire, in a chair tilted far back, back on knees, feet comfortably toasting on the stove, sat Schmeling. As we opened the door, he looked around, surprised. As for us, we just stood gaping at him, our mouths open.

"Wh-wh-where——" began Stewart, stuttering worse than Post-Mortem had ever done.

"Hello, boys! Come right in!" said Schmeling, with his usual good humor.

"Wh-wh-where have you been?" Stewart got his question out at last.

"I took a sudden notion to run up to Silverton," answered Schmeling, staring at him in surprise. "Didn't you get my note? I left an order for you to get the money you needed Saturday for those books."

"O-oh!" said Jack, in an unnatural whisper. But being by nature a cork, he came to the surface soon, and asked in a rather offended tone:

"Why in the name of mischief did you go to Silverton Saturday?"

Otto blushed. "To tell you the truth," he said, "that little taste of saurkraut at your spread the other night made me want more. I went up more for that than for anything else. And I brought back some more blackberry pies. Let me give you some, fellows."

He gave the invitation rather doubtfully, but we took him up with enthusiasm. Burney asked permission to make some of his famous coffee, and we sat on the floor and ate and drank and drank and ate. Remember that was the first morsel to pass our lips since an early breakfast. Good? Find me today champagne and canvasback ducks that are half so good! We didn't stop until we had eaten the pies to the last crumb, and drained our cups to the dregs.

There was another cup that we were forced to drain to the dregs later. It was long before we heard the last of dragging the lake for a man who'd gone on a two-days' jaunt to Silverton. We put as good a face on the matter as possible, cheering ourselves with the reflection that if it hadn't happened we wouldn't have had Schmeling as a member of our frat. Dear old Schmeling! He's president of the Senior Law Class now, and one of the most popular men in college, but to us he will always be Post-Mortem.

El Dorado

(Second Prize Poem.)

A knight rode out across the world
In search of El Dorado.
In dawning light the fields were bright
As he sought for El Dorado.
But he passed them by, for near the sky
He saw the mist by the morning kissed
Like the domes of El Dorado.
But it did not last, and on he passed
In search of El Dorado.

He climbed the steep of the mountain peak
In search of El Dorado.
Around his feet grew roses sweet
But he sought for El Dorado.
And he trampled them low as he chased the glow
Of the morning star on the peak afar
Like the gleam of El Dorado.
But it faded at last, and on he passed
In search of El Dorado.

He rode in the gold of noon-day bold
In search of El Dorado.
A woman fair with glinting hair,
Yellow as El Dorado,
Called out to rest, but on he pressed
In search of El Dorado.
Queen of the land she offered her hand
And power and fame to crown his name
In the stead of El Dorado.
But he pushed aside, for he said, "I ride
In search of El Dorado."

O'er hill and plain, in shine and rain,
He sought for El Dorado.
The long years passed and still he asked
In vain for El Dorado.
On a naked hill in the evening chill
He looked for El Dorado,
When the mists arise and the sunset dies
Looked into the Past and saw at last
The Vision of El Dorado.
Within his soul, as in a bowl
A star is caught and a wonder wrought,
The Vision of El Dorado.

Tragedies of Childhood

I.

"YOU."

GERTRUDE E. MALLETT.

YOU were only a little boy, just a curly-headed lad of four; but you called yourself a man because you were mother's eldest child, her only son. You liked Mother and Father best of all. You said "Muvver" and "Favver" because your baby tongue was not very well trained as yet. Then, after Father and Mother, came Bruce, your Scotch collie. You and Bruce were great chums, and you told him all your childish troubles when Mother was busy or away. He always understood and his brown eyes comforted you.

One morning after nurse had bathed and dressed you, you went down to the breakfast room and called joyously to Mother and Father because you had "beaten" them down. No one answered you, but you thought that they had not heard you, so you curled up on the big fur rug before the fireplace to wait. You became interested in the fairies and the dragons in the flames, and for a long time you forgot you were alone. Then nurse came and told you not to wait any longer, but to eat your breakfast. Mother was ill, she said, and Father wanted to stay with her for a while.

You did not enjoy eating alone, and as Bruce could not come into the house you hurried through the meal and went out to play. Not long after the rain began to fall, so you had to go indoors again. You coaxed a little and were permitted to take Bruce in with you. At luncheon you were alone again, and you wandered through the house disconsolately all afternoon; always on tip-toe because Mother was ill. You cried when you could not go up to her room, but nurse said you must not bother her. Bruce followed you around until he made you cross, and you scolded him, and then he looked so hurt that you put your arms around his neck and patted him, and you and he stayed there close together and went to sleep.

You slept until the sound of a strange man's voice awakened you. You rubbed your eyes and blinked at him; at first you were a little bit frightened, but he came over to you and said, "Poor little chap, you'd better come with me for a little while, won't you?" You went, and he took you up to the nursery and told you stories. You wanted to see Mother, but they told you that she had gone away and you couldn't see her. Mother did not come to kiss you that night when you were in bed, and Father forgot to "tuck you in," and you cried yourself to sleep. You would not eat anything the next morning and you went out to the stable and climbed up on a big box to think it all over. Who were all those strange ladies about the house? And where was Father? And why couldn't you see Mother? You sat there for a long time, then you felt a soft head laid upon your knees, for Bruce was there. Something hurt you and you had a big lump in your throat. Bruce held up his paw to shake hands with you, then he sat up, and begged, and rolled over, and barked, but something was tight around your heart, and you couldn't speak. He came and licked your hand, then you got off the box and put your head close to his and cried.

Then you heard someone coming down the walk, and Father's voice calling you. You answered him rather feebly, and he took you in his arms and held you close. You asked for Mother; Father kissed you and his voice trembled when he told you that she had gone away, and that she couldn't come back, and that you and Father were to keep house alone after that, so you must be a big man and not cry any more. Father stayed with you while you ate your luncheon, then he had to go upstairs again. You hunted all over the house calling Mother, but she did not answer you. Nurse told you the same thing that Father had told you, but you knew she would not go away without you; she always took you with her when she went to see Grandma, or anyone else. Then the next day Father took you and Bruce to see Grandma, and you were glad because you thought that Mother would be there; but she was not.

Grandma kissed you, and once you saw her crying. Bruce would not play. He just followed you around and looked at you. You asked Grandma where Mother had gone, and you were told that she had gone away; and then you asked, "Way, where?" Then she said, "Mother has gone to God, dear."

Then you knew. Mother had told you about God many times, and you loved Him, but you couldn't see why Mother had gone away to Him and left you and Father there alone; but you were so tired, and you had a funny hurt in your throat, and you cuddled closer in Grandma's arms, and went to sleep looking forward to the time when God would let Mother come back to you and Father.—The Washingtonian.

Commencement

(First Prize Poem.)

For your life is even as the life ye live,
And the days, the days ye fill,
Your past is the past that ye have made,
The future, the future ye will.

The suns that have come and the suns that have gone
Are passed away like a dream,
But new suns rise and new suns set,
And for you their uttermost gleam.

Some will conquer the storm and gale,
Some will struggle with dauntless breath,
Some will enjoy all pleasure can yield;
Some, in vain, will strive with Death.

But wherever ye go, to the ends of the Earth,
From the farthest limits of unknown bays,
There will throb fond hearts at the mem'ries sweet
Of the fellows of by-gone days.

For your life is even as the life ye live,
And the days, the days ye fill,
Your past is the past that ye have made
And the future, the future ye will.

THE BLUFFER

BLANCHE BRACE.

BY fours and threes and twos and here and there a solitary one the class filed into the big room, crammed with seats, chalky with the dust of the whole week. It was a conglomerate room, used for many classes. Some half-moulded maps lay on a table in front, and on one a mountain, having become detached, reposed serenely on the glaring blue surface of the Bering Sea. Pictures of a geological nature hung in mathematical precision on the walls. Some lecturer had left a moving picture apparatus in the rear of the room months before, and against it the Dreamer stumbled as he wandered to his seat.

The Instructor stood in front waiting for the bell to ring, never quite at ease until he was in the actual swing of the work. He was a large, blonde man, rather young than otherwise, with an impassive face. The Pretty Junior paused to tell him that she had missed class the day before because of the illness of her mother. Always embarrassed at such proximity to a young woman, he murmured hastily:

"Yes, yes, I know." The Pretty Junior smiled as she went on to her seat, reflecting that he knew much more than her mother did. She was a "nut brown maid," with the red looking richly through the olive of her skin, and hair and eyes superlatively black. A positive little halo of beauty shone around her head.

Not far behind the Pretty Junior the Bluffer came. Then the Real Student walked in briskly, deposited a heap of books on the floor, took out her fountain pen and opened her note-book. The Real Student had a serious face, thoughtful eyes, and a quantity of smooth hair the color of half-pulled taffy lumped upon her head.

The bell rang, and the Instructor rose to write the subject of the day's lesson on the board. For forty-five minutes he discoursed with great earnestness on the different sets of nerve centers. Then he stopped abruptly and began to question the class on the work of a month before.

The Real Student's hand went up and waved about limply, like a sail when there is only a little wind. A wave of despondency swept over the rest of the class. Everybody sighed, except the Dreamer, who was gazing out at the blue sky and the green of the trees. The Instructor must have longed to throw an eraser at him. As that would have been an act of impulse, and as he taught that all impulse should be eliminated from the scheme of life, he threw a question:

"Mr. Creel, you may explain the psychology of laughter." The Dreamer smiled faintly to himself as if thinking the question over. But he wasn't. He didn't know there had been a question.

"Mr. Donovan." The Instructor's voice was expressionless, but there was a gleam of still uneliminated wrath in his eye. Mr. Donovan couldn't think, although he knew.

"Miss Eames, will you tell me?" Miss Eames obligingly said that she would tell him if she could, but that she didn't know.

Next in alphabetical order came the Pretty Junior. The Bluffer caught the look of distress that she threw at him, leaned forward to shut her off from the Professor's view, and coughed impressively. The class wondered at his fool-hardiness in thus attracting attention. But the Bluffer knew what he was about. After having bluffed a practical father into letting him come to college, and a watchful faculty into letting him stay, he had no intention of being balked by a mere Psychology question. When the Instructor turned towards him he shrank back, as if particularly wishing not to be called upon.

"Mr. Lowell," said the teacher.

"I was wondering," spoke up the Bluffer, "whether in asking that question you refer to the laughter of a child or to that of an adult."

Such of the class as knew the Bluffer intimately smiled. The Instructor looked puzzled.

"Why, either," he answered.

"Now I should think," said the Bluffer, in a respectfully argumentative tone, "that the psychology of laughter would be very different in the two cases."

"I don't think I get your point," hazarded the Professor.

"The laughter of a child," explained the Bluffer, earnestly, "is always natural, always unassumed. It seems to me that our author has taken adult cases and worked out from them theories that apply only to children."

"There is something in that," admitted the Professor. "But take the laughter of grown people who laugh quite naturally and unassumedly. What is the psychology of laughter then, Mr. Lowell?"

"But can laughter ever be quite natural in a man or a woman?" persisted the Bluffer. "Is it not always, subconsciously at least, forced in some degree? Is it not—"

The bell rang.

"We will take up the discussion at this point tomorrow. You have raised an interesting question, Mr. Lowell," said the Instructor.

The class rose. The Bluffer wiped the perspiration from his brow and walked away by the side of the Pretty Junior. The laugh they laughed in the hall seemed natural and unassumed.—The Washingtonian.

The Bookworm

Behold the human bookworm, bent a human question mark,
In somber vestments clad, with bowing head
And with a troubled, thoughtful mien. He seldom walks abroad,
But oft will sit e'en through the dreary night
And pore and pore over some ancient book
Long since forgotten by the common throng that hurries heedless on.
Here he finds food for unrest of soul, which daily grows.
He meditates and puzzles long o'er pagan theories
Evolved when thought was young. He likes them not, but ever seeks for more.
Thus on and on in Error's mighty circle doth he go;
But daily grows more withered, bent and old. Till he shall die
Walled in and shut from light by books and books and books—
Unsatisfied to the last.

Grind From Now On

On a slippery field and in a drizzling rain storm, Coach Gilmore Dobie met the University football squad last night for the season's first practice. The work was purely preliminary in character, consisting of punting, falling on the ball and the other elements. From now till Thanksgiving there will be no let-up for Captain Fred Tegmeier and his men.

Coach Dobie is making no boasts, no predictions. He talks little about the prospects or the future. All his time is given to the present. He expresses neither admiration nor dissatisfaction with his material. From what little they have seen of him, his men like his looks, and are free to say so. To an outsider both the team and coach look good. The prospects are for a strong eleven.

Not Many Old Men.

In addition to Captain Tegmeier there were but three or four of last year's "W" men out last night. Among them were Flaherty, guard, Beck, center; and Mattson, end. Bantz will be on the field in a fortnight. Willis will be back in a day or two. Others of the '07 squad that took out uniforms were Eugene, Colin, Berge, Somerset, and

9500 Members

IOTA DELTA, the local fraternity, which was organized last year, has petitioned for a charter from the national fraternity, Delta Upsilon, one of the largest and strongest organizations in the country. Delta U is a non-secret society, being different in this respect from nearly all college fraternities. It was organized at Williams College in 1834 as a direct result of the objection to the secret feature of fraternities. It has at present thirty-six active chapters, five inactive chapters, and a membership of 9,169. The colors of the national are old gold and sapphire blue. Its official publication is the Delta Upsilon Record.

Prominent Faculty Members.

Dean Fuller and Dr. Prentiss are alumni members of Delta Upsilon on the faculty. Prominent downtown members of the national are Superintendent Cooper of the Seattle schools and Mr. J. F. Bruen of the law firm of Bruen & Bruen.

The local fraternity, Iota Delta, was organized November 21, 1907, and was maintained last year purely as a local. The members of the organization are

The fraternity was organized February 14, 1908, but its existence has been kept a secret until the present time. An attempt will be made to get a charter from the national legal fraternity of Delta Chi. It is the purpose of the members to admit only representative men from the junior and senior classes of the law school.

MR. H. G. BYERS, head of the chemistry department, who has just returned from a fifteen months' leave of absence, spent in visiting German universities and pursuing research work in chemistry, expressed himself yesterday as thoroughly disappointed with the character of work done in the higher German institutions. In direct contrast, he is most agreeably surprised in the comparative excellency of the work in the American universities.

"In general terms, I wish to say," said Dr. Byers, "that America has already passed Germany in the excellence of its collegiate system. This is because so far as my limited observations could make certain, Germany has stood still, or nearly so, during the last twenty or twenty-five years while American graduate study has been born and grown to virility. This is a fact utterly unappreciated in Germany, but one which is beginning to be appreciated here at home. It is shown by the great decrease of American students there. Not more than one-fourth as many Americans attend the German colleges today as ten years ago."

Above is a reproduction of part of the first page of the first issue of the first Daily Pacific Wave issued at the University, September 15, 1908. Roy D. Rudio, '09, was its first editor. The journal was quick to take on all the essential characteristics of a daily paper, and competed successfully with the big down town publications. Tried as an experiment at first, the Daily Pacific Wave improved with each succeeding issue, and was permanently established as a daily. It is the official publication of the University. Mr. Rudio was succeeded in February, 1909, by Roy D. Pinkerton, '11.

History of the Daily Pacific Wave

A SEMI-LITERARY monthly, the Washington Visitor, was the first predecessor of the present Daily Pacific Wave and was founded in 1885, lasting only a few numbers. Its more immediate ancestor was the Pacific Wave, founded in 1891 by F. Otto Colling and Edgar A. McClellan, both of the Class of '93. It, too, was unsuccessful, and died an untimely death, in spite of its immense popularity at the time of its introduction. Two years later the paper was revived, under the same name and management, and has continued ever since, developing from a monthly, in 1893, to a bi-weekly, in 1897, a bi-weekly in newspaper form, in 1901, a weekly, in 1906, a semi-weekly, in 1907, and a daily, in 1908. In 1895, a rival paper, The College Idea, was started by Marion Edwards, and had existence for two years, when it was absorbed by the Pacific Wave.

At the time of its establishment, in 1893, the Pacific Wave was voted the official organ of the University of Washington. When it became a weekly it passed into the hands of the Pacific Wave Publishing Company, a private corporation composed of students of the University. The paper was supported by popular subscription, and proved a financial failure. It again passed into the hands of the students of the University when the Board of Control, on June 6, 1907, voted to take it over, and support it by adding a compulsory subscription of one dollar to the registration fee. Part of the agreement, when it was taken over, was that it should be made a daily or semi-weekly the next year; the owners of stock in the Pacific Wave Publishing Company voting their stock to the A. S. U. W. without any remuneration.

The first editor of the Weekly Pacific Wave, who had control of a paper of the present five-column size, was Victor Zednick, '07, who took command in March, 1906. He was succeeded the following autumn by William E. Parker, '07, the last editor of a Weekly Wave. John W. Campbell, '08, got out the first semi-weekly edition on September 21, 1907. On his resignation the following spring, he was succeeded by George S. Spirk, '08, who was appointed by the Board of Control on February 4, 1908, to fill the two weeks interregnum until the election of Roy D. Rudio, '09. Mr. Rudio was re-elected editor for the next year, with the understanding that he was to establish a Daily Pacific Wave the following fall.

The first edition of the Daily Pacific Wave was printed September 15, 1908, and the term of the editor-in-chief shortened later, at the editor's request, to one semester. The second editor-in-chief of the Daily Wave, Roy D. Pinkerton, '11, was elected December 23, 1908, taking office January 1, 1909.

The Daily Pacific Wave has been successful and popular from the very first, and has taken rank amongst the foremost college papers of the United States.

The Washington Alumnus

WASHINGTON ALUMNUS originated in the University News-Letter, and was first published in 1906 and 1907 by the Washington Alumni Association. It was a folio four-column sheet, about one-fourth the size of the present Daily Wave, and appeared semi-monthly. Its first editor was Charles Hall, '06, who was succeeded by Editor-in-Chief Edgar J. Wright and Managing Editor Fred W. Vincent. Fifty-five numbers were issued for the first volume and five for the second. It was revived in the autumn of 1907 by Mr. Merle H. Thorpe's first class in journalism as the University News-Letter, issued weekly, and sent to all the newspapers in the Northwest who cared to publish University news. The Philadelphia North American was one of the regular recipients of the paper, at their own request.

The first number of the present Alumnus was issued by the class in journalism in magazine form at the end of the last college year. At the beginning of the next college year a regular staff was chosen and the Alumnus became a regular feature of college publications.

The Washingtonian

THE WASHINGTONIAN had its first inception in the Washington Visitor, a literary monthly that appeared in 1885 and lasted for only a few numbers. The Pacific Wave, which appeared in 1893, did not become a literary publication until 1897, when it was forced to do so by the establishment of the rival College Idea, when it devoted one issue a month to purely literary matter. This did not last long, however, and the absorption of the College Idea by the Pacific Wave witnessed the decadence of literary work in the University.

The present Washingtonian was planned during the close of the college year 1907-08 and the first number published at the beginning of the college year 1908-09. The stock is in the hands of a private company composed of students and ex-students of the University. Positions on the staff are not confined to members of the stock company, but are determined by the amount and quality of the work done by contributors, faithful work being rewarded by a position on the staff. The publication has been from the beginning a financial and literary success.

The University of Washington

SONG BOOK

THE University of Washington Song Book is a reality at last. The idea of a song book for the University has been an elusive pot of gold at the foot of the rainbow of hope that has baffled all attempts at conversion into reality for several years, and the new volume is the result of the patient thought and careful work of several editorial staffs.

Harry C. Coffman, '99, former Librarian of the University, first conceived the idea of a song book. It finally became a hobby with him, and he rode it assiduously and untiringly as long as he was connected with the University, but lack of songs and general apathy were stumbling blocks too large for him to overcome, and he was able to leave no material results behind him except a small but growing interest in the idea of such a book, that rolled on, accumulating weight for several years before anything tangible came of it.

When Ed. M. Hawes was General Manager of the A. S. U. W. he, together with Miss Carrie Heffner as editor-in-chief, was authorized to get out a book. Miss Heffner appointed a large staff of assistants and much work was done in the way of collecting songs, but owing to the fact that Miss Heffner was not able to return to college in the fall of 1907, the project was temporarily dropped.

In May of 1908, however, the Board of Control appointed William E. Parker, '07, Law '09, editor and manager of the book, and after much work the present volume has resulted. Mr. Parker has been assisted materially by Miss Grace Zimmerman, '09, Miss Adelaide Fischer, '09, Kenneth Durham, '10, and Russell Parker, '11, in the preparation of the volume. C. O. Kimball, the Musical Director of the University, has worked untiringly in an effort to make the enterprise a success, and much of what is of value in the book is due to him.

Synopsis.

In this play William is the philosopher, who smoothes over all difficulties. Gloria is the beautiful but cold heroine, while Valentine is the impulsive lover. Philip and Dolly, the twins, are everywhere at all times, always creating a disturbance and keeping the play lively. Mrs. Clandon, their mother, advocates “Woman’s Rights,” and therefore has never cared for her gruff husband, who holds strictly old-fashioned ideas. In the end they are reunited, and we are led to believe that Valentine’s suit will end well. Phil and Dolly gaily accept any new situation, while William gently philosophizes, saying: “You never can tell—you never can tell.”

On the evening of June 12, 1908, the Senior ball of the class of 1908 was held in Christensen's Hall, Broadway and Madison. Decorations consisted of palms and cut flowers. Before dancing commenced a short classical program was rendered by the orchestra. Programs were distributed at the close of the grand march, which was led by Dr. and Mrs. Thomas F. Kane. The ball was an unqualified success and proved an excellent close for the social events of the college year.

Junior Prom. is considered one of the very foremost functions in the University social world, and the 1910 Prom. more than fulfilled the standard of splendor and enjoyment set by previous classes. The committee in charge carried out nicely the entire program. Wagner's orchestra furnished excellent music.

Decorations were of a most striking and pleasing character, the big ball room being festooned with evergreens and cut flowers, with profuse arrangement of palms. The dining room was done in black and red, the class colors.

STUDENT DEMONSTRATIONS

An Awakened College Spirit

THOUGH hackneyed by rally orators, by student publications, by the managers and coaches of the various University activities, and even by the city press, it is nevertheless true, though seldom appreciated, that the rooter, the booster, the sincere patriot of one's Alma Mater, is a growing power in the forces which are directed towards successful University enterprises. Being ably coached and led in singing, yelling and doing the serpentine, the rooting section of the University made more progress and did more to infuse good cheer, grit and determination in the battling Washington teams this year than ever before.

Grover C. Winn, otherwise known as "Ki Ram," deserves much of the credit. Twice elected 'Varsity yell leader, he made good each time. Though no talented musician himself, he unselfishly encouraged others to let loose of their pent-up accomplishments, and resultant classic bleacher songs lent a happy diversion to the continuous college yell. Not content with mustering an effective rooting squad among the men, Yell Leader Winn arranged for a similar organization among the co-eds. It likewise was a splendid success.

Snappy yells, encouraging songs, triumphant serpentines and plenty of individual cheer and repartee coaxed the very best out of the Washington men striving for victory on gridiron, diamond and track. Knowing that every collegian was with him, every contestant struggled the harder. Dauntless cheers in the face of evident defeat put new life in them, and often the tide of fortune swerved in Washington's favor as a result.

Freshman Rules

Adopted by the men of the University at the opening of the college year 1908-9 for the purpose of instilling a due respect in the Freshmen for upper classmen and for the old established customs and traditions of the University. Being amenable to upper classmen's authority themselves, the Sophomores were entrusted with the enforcement of these rules. So well did the second-year men perform their duty that all of the few Freshmen violators were subjected to fitting penalties, from ducking in Geyser Basin and Union Bay to ignoble "hot handing" in full view of interested spectators. On the whole, however, the Freshmen showed a remarkably wholesome and gratifying energy themselves in enforcing the rules, even on refractory classmates. As a partial compromise the Sophomores agreed to and did wear a regulation red hat with a small white band. Following are the rules:

1. Freshmen shall wear a small olive green cap with a large pearl button on it.
2. Freshmen shall not wear derbies on the Campus.
3. Freshmen shall not sit on the Ad. steps.
4. Freshmen shall not wear dress suits to college functions.
5. Freshmen shall enter the Auditorium by the rear doors.
6. High School caps, numerals and sweaters shall not be worn on the Campus.
7. Freshmen shall not smoke pipes on the Campus.
8. Freshmen shall not take co-eds to college functions held during the day.

"Junior Day" is one of the big college affairs of the year and is looked forward to eagerly by all students, and especially so by each Junior class. The class of '04 held the first celebration of the kind May 1, 1903, and since then it has been the pride of Juniors as hosts to make the day a gala one for the University.

Track, field and aquatic sports, baseball, a dance, and various other events have been the general order of the holiday. This year the track events were omitted, chiefly because an inter-class track meet was held early in April, and because Junior Day came on Saturday instead of Friday.

Especial attention was given aquatics, Pharmacy Point being the scene of festivity. Every conceivable water sport possible in boating was pulled off,—everything from eight-oared shell races to tub races. True to its purpose, the day attracted all attention from the classroom and its attendant cares, the whole affair being a celebration of the students, by the students and for the students.

Beautiful weather combined with excellent management of the day's program to make Junior Day one of the most enjoyable occasions ever pulled off at the University. The program was conducted promptly. In the interclass track meet the Freshmen proved easy victors, piling up 51 points to offset 34 by the Juniors, 28 by the Sophomores and 5 by the Seniors. At 9:30 a. m. the Fir Tree Club initiation stunt created much humorous excitement.

In the Freshman-Sophomore shell race, pulled off at 3:20 p. m., the second year men walked away from their competitors on the mile and a half course, coming in three lengths ahead. This entitled the Sophomores to the L. L. Moore loving cup, up for the winning crew.

Of the other aquatic events, Will Cooper won the canoe singles, Glen Metsker and Ed. Brown took the doubles, and Fred Brower and Paul Thompson came out conquerors in the canoe war. One of the prettiest events of the day was the Freshman-Sophomore Women's crew race, in which the first-year girls were winners by the narrow margin of half a length. Distance was one mile.

Campus Day

The Fifth Annual Campus Day, Friday, May 8, 1908, was probably the most successful ever celebrated. Ideal weather conditions brought out a maximum attendance of students and faculty, and under the able leadership of Commander-in-Chief Edmund S. Meany, Father of Campus Day, new trails were cut, old ones repaired, and the lake shore and campus were cleaned of fallen trees and dead brush.

A dozen main trails and bypaths were constructed. The Seniors widened and re-crowned the trail from the Ad. Building to Forty-fifth street and cleared it of brush along the sides. The "gym" trail was repaired similarly by the Juniors. The second year men constructed a new trail from the gym to the railroad tracks. Other trails to the lake shore were built by the Sophomores. Praise is due the Class of 1911 for the excellent work they did in putting the torch to the dead brush and trees along the lake. They also graded a good trail along the shore. Engineering students, who superintended the grading and crowning of all the trails, built a splendid road to the boat house from Clarke Hall. This new trail is known as the "Crew Trail." The "Awkward Squad," under the Political Science Department, constructed a nice path from the Observatory to Forty-fifth Street. Other squads cleaned up the Athletic Field.

From eight o'clock until noon the men worked busily on the Campus, while the co-eds untiringly climbed up and down hills, over fresh trails, carrying buckets of lemonade for the thirsty laborers. At noon the great bell in the Ad. belfry rang in the luncheon hour. With glad shouts and hurrying steps everyone assembled in the oak grove to the rear of Clarke Hall and lined the tables, while the women served. That hour was perhaps the busiest of the day.

Speeches followed the lunch. Mounting a table for a platform, President T. F. Kane introduced the first speaker, Professor Joel Johanson, who told of the "Value of Traditions at Oxford." Mr. John W. Roberts, counsel for the A.-Y.-P. Exposition, and Mr. Ira A. Nadeau, Director-General, spoke on "The University and the Exposition" and "Co-operation," respectively. Professor Meany closed with a stirring speech on "Campus Day and Its Significance," in which he said he hoped Campus Day would remain a University tradition and holiday even though there were nothing else to do than "polish the old trails with a chamois skin." And it bids well to be so.

At 1:30 o'clock the big bell again sounded the signal to begin work. Just as ceaselessly as in the forenoon the various squads labored all afternoon until five o'clock.

In the evening the Annual Campus Day Informal was held. The dancers were dressed in old clothes and tennis suits. Four hundred students were in attendance, netting the rowing fund sixty dollars.

Fleet Day

One of the most memorable occasions in the history of the University is "Fleet Day," Monday, May 24, 1908, when more than thirteen hundred students and guests boarded the steamer Yosemite and visited the great American Fleet of twelve great formidable battleships anchored in Seattle harbor. It was a beautiful summer morning and the sun glistened on the water in the bay and on the white armor and decks of the big fighting machines with their bristling guns.

Loyalty to our Alma Mater consists primarily of loyalty to our country, and almost every student proved his patriotism by being on board that day. It was a problem of handling the crowds, but the great Yosemite was capable.

With a long, shrill, warning blast, amid the slow swirling of the paddle wheels, the hissing of escaping steam, lusty college yells, and music by the band, the majestic excursion boat moved away from the pier. It was the proudest moment of her memorable life. Every available space on board was taken. Each deck was a mass of humanity with waving pennants. Even the shrouds and stays sagged with the heavy weight of the more daring who had climbed up from the hurricane deck.

The ship steamed out into the busy harbor, past the long array, circled, and then wound a serpentine course through the three miles of vessels. Each man-of-war was greeted with the college, "Washington, Washington, Rah! Rah! Rah! Rah! Washingtonia! Rah! Rah! Rah! Rah! Rah!"

Our yells received an ovation from the blue jackets, but their joy was unbounded when thirteen hundred students barked out old familiar, "Navy! Navy! Navy! N-N-N-A-A-A-V-V-V-Y-Y-Y! Navy! Navy! Navy! Navy!"

Admiral Sperry had planned to receive the students on his flagship, the Connecticut, but the Admiral's official duties caused a change in the plans, and the students boarded the Minnesota.

After a short visit of inspection on the ship the bugles sounded and in a remarkably short time the sailors and marines were drawn up on the after deck. With nearly a thousand uniformed fighters at attention, a big Washington pennant was presented by the Wave Staff to Captain Miller, who accepted the token of our University's best wishes in a neat speech. He promised that the pennant would be kept in the Admiral's quarters aboard his ship, where it still reposes to remind the present and future admirals of the University of Washington's loyalty to her country.

After these ceremonies the throng re-embarked on the Yosemite, and, after circling around the fleet again, landed.

The Plug Scrap

Nearly an hundred "Naughty Nine" wearers of the Junior plugs appeared enforce on the campus Wednesday morning, May 6, 1908, and so valiantly withstood the fierce onslaught of their natural foes, the Seniors, that only two of their number lost their plugs.

However, there were many smashed headgears, and heads, too, for that matter, before the struggle ceased.

Excellent weather prevailed, and hundreds of underclassmen and co-eds witnessed the traditional fight. Torn clothes and bruised flesh characterized the contest, as usual, but nobody was hurt seriously. It was more a test of endurance and wind than anything else.

The Plug Scrap last year assumed a little different character from previous years, in that the Seniors strove to capture the plugs rather than smash them. One reason was because the third year men had stuffed their hats and made it almost impossible to stave them in. Capture was about the only alternative for the Seniors.

Honors were about even, but the Juniors outnumbered the Seniors nearly two to one.

Cane Rush

Ki Ram Winn, 'Varsity yell leader, slowly raised his old sombrero, and as it dropped the last Cane Rush perhaps in the history of Washington was on, Friday, September 25. For three long minutes the fight raged. When time was called the second year men were found to have eighteen hands on the coveted oak stick—two hands more than the Freshmen.

Participants in the rush had arrived early, clad in garbs of every conceivable color and long age of wear.

A number of upperclassmen served as willing officials. The Sophomores lined up at the west goal, the Freshmen, double in number, at the east goal. At the starting signal the classes charged towards each other, racing for the cane in the center of the field. Two hundred students struggled in a pile.

The three minutes seemed as many hours to those underneath, but at last the rush was ended. Each class withdrew in a separate group, and so certain was each of victory that they lingered on the field, rivalling each other in lustiness and vim of college and class yells, while the judges were deciding the match. Superior generalship against almost overwhelming odds in numbers won the day for the Sophomores.

Student sentiment has since denounced the Cane Rush as too dangerous a method of settling class supremacy, and push ball may hereafter supplant the old custom.

Rallies and Torchlight Processions

In the face of big odds Washington won the football championship. Coach Dobie deserves credit, but for the enthusiasm and the real spirit displayed throughout the season, the rooters are to be thanked.

Beginning early, an organized system of rooting was inaugurated. Then men met in the Gym each Friday night to rehearse the old and to memorize the new songs and yells.

On the evening of October 16, 1908, the monster down town parade passed into history. Gathering on the Ad. steps, the variously attired rooters, with torches, marched to the special cars which conveyed them to the city. After parading through the streets from Pioneer Square to the Moore Theatre, the torches were burned in a big bonfire near the P.-I. building.

On the day following Whitman lost to Washington, 6—0. Of course, the team did it, but the rooting helped.

On the night before the Pullman game the bonfire rally was held on Denny Field. Wood for the occasion was furnished by the Freshmen, song books were distributed, and various Alumni and Upperclassmen spoke of the good old days and of their former victories. A unique stunt of the evening was the burning of the "Pullman Hoodoo."

The last down town rally was held the night before Thanksgiving. In preparation a preliminary fest was pulled off on Denny Field during assembly hour. Several Alumni spoke and a collection was taken up to buy confetti for the stunts on the morrow.

The evening parade was the best of the season, the feature of which was the automobile procession of the Alumni. So ended the season of 1908. The rallies are past, but the memory and inspiration will linger with us always.

Phi Delta Phi Initiation

One of the annual spectacular attractions at the University is the initiation stunt of the Phi Delta Phi Law Fraternity. The ceremony varies somewhat each year, in respect to costuming and order of program, but it takes in general the form of a criminal court, in which those to be initiated are arraigned before a strict judge and forced to speak on their innocence or guilt. Sometimes fines and various punishments are imposed, then the culprit is forced to solicit from the audience or do some ridiculous stunt. This year the eight candidates were marched in chain and ball shackles, dressed in vagrant costumes, their faces besmirched and hair disheveled. The performances are held before the Ad. steps each year and attract hundreds of students.

Burial of Class of 1911

One day a Freshman Class came to college, large in numbers and abnormal in their brave and aggressive spirit. On the other hand, at this same college there attended a Sophomore Class. Their dejected spirit was only surpassed by their passiveness. Surely something must be done—at least so thought the Freshmen.

Accordingly a "Nephitis Mephitica" was captured and killed, carefully embalmed, exquisitely encased in a beautiful little coffin, and with appropriate ceremonies was put away on ice to await the big event, Wednesday, October 28, 1908.

A suitable announcement drew many sympathizers to witness the interment during the assembly hour. As was hopefully expected, the second year men did bestir themselves, but played into the Freshmen's hands.

The burial of the polecat was announced for the Amphitheatre, and thither assembled the Sophs to await the procession.

With due solemnity befitting the occasion the Freshmen lingered for a time near the Ad. Building, and then the psuedo pall-bearers and mourners wended their way toward Denny Field.

The burial was simple but impressive. The little grave was filled, an appropriate headstone was erected, and a touching chant ended the farce.

By this time the Sophomores, detecting the ruse, arrived on the scene just in time to see "their finish."

The fiercest class fight in the history of Washington followed, but the Freshmen worsted their rivals badly.

Under a sheltering tree the mound of the grave can still be seen.

The Annual Tie-Up

Every year the Tie-Up and Proclamation Posting is keenly anticipated by the Underclassmen. It is a preliminary tilt for exterior evidences of class supremacy, and both turn out in full force the first two or three nights. Last year the Freshmen walked away with the Tie-Up, though they lost out in Proclamation Posting. Nearly 120 Freshies made war on the Sophs Wednesday night, September 16, 1908, and captured all within reach, huddled their victims together, and took the photo reproduced on the opposite page in the glare of their celebration bonfire.

HEY! FRESHIES!

WE, THE SOPHOMORE CLASS, HAVING BEATEN THE CLASS OF 1910 INTO AN UNRECOGNIZABLE, JELLY-LIKE MASS, CONTROLLED the A. S. U. W., and MANAGED ALL STUDENT ACTIVITIES, HEREBY CONDESCEND TO WARN YOU

You soft-headed bunch of Infants, warmed-over cadavers, drivelling mutts, drooling dubs, pale green, pin-headed parasites; you conceited crowd of Kindergarten Rummies,

NOT TO BREAK THE FOLLOWING RULES: FRESHIES MUST NOT

1. Smoke on the Campus.
2. Sit on Ad. steps.
3. Wear High School Emblems, Hats or Caps on the Campus.
4. Wear Derbies or Dress Suits.
5. Fuss, Queen, Lollygag, or be seen at Daylight Functions with Ladies.
6. Bring Nursing Bottles on the Campus.

BUT SHALL

1. Leave Assemblies by the rear door of the Auditorium.
2. Wear the Green Cap designated by the Upper Classmen as the Official Freshman Cap.

If you break these rules, we, the SOPHOMORES,

WILL BEAT YOUR BLOCKS OFF

REMEMBER, FRESH, there is still plenty of water in the lake!

The Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition

FOR the purpose of exploiting Alaska and the Yukon region, and the states and countries bordering on the Pacific Ocean, the people of Seattle have erected on the University campus the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, which will open June 1, 1909, and continue until October 15, 1909. It occupies 250 acres bordering on both Lakes Union and Washington, and represents a total expenditure of $10,000,000. It is the first world's fair ever held on any college campus.

The Fair was conceived at first as an enterprise for the exploitation of Alaska, with the idea that an unambitious exhibition of the products of the Northland would dispel the popular error that ice, reindeer and gold were the country's only assets. The idea was gradually enlarged on. Seattle decided to exploit the Pacific Coast states, Rocky Mountain states and Western Canada as well as the Yukon, and to call attention to the possibilities of Oriental trade. The name Pacific was added.

The Exposition was formally launched on May 7, 1906. Fifty representative citizens composed the board of trustees of the new corporation. They elected officers: J. E. Chilberg, president; John H. McGraw, R. A. Ballinger and A. S. Kerry, vice-presidents; W. M. Sheffield, secretary; and C. R. Collins, treasurer.

In one day, October 2, 1907, the people of Seattle subscribed for $650,000 of the Exposition stock. Later an additional $150,000 was absorbed, making $800,000 in all. As the work progressed bonds to the extent of $350,000 were issued. Not one cent of loan was asked from the government, all the money being raised at home. Federal participation was assured by a Congressional appropriation of $600,000.

The State of Washington appropriated $400,000 for the Exposition and $600,000 for permanent buildings for the University, and providing use of them by the Fair. Other neighboring states followed—Oregon with $100,000, California the same amount, and many others almost as generously.

Four great features stand out prominently which have never been adequately presented at preceding fairs. They are: (1) The exploitation of the immense territory of virgin Alaska, and the still less-known Canadian Yukon, Alaska; (2) the greatest mining display ever collected; (3) the development of commercial relations with the Orient, and (4) the construction of permanent buildings.

Besides countries and regions previously mentioned, the following will have exhibits at the A.-Y.-P. Fair: Great Britain, France, Germany, Russia, the Netherlands, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Formosa, Korea, French East Indies, German Colonies, Guatemala, Honduras, British India, Mexico, Dutch East Indies, Nicaragua, New Zealand, Panama, Peru, Siam and Salvador.

More interest has been taken by the United States government in the Exposition than at any before this. The federal display will show an assay office, a mint, and other department workings; science, fisheries, life-saving stations, and similar interesting features of the government service.

The amusement and athletic departments will offer many events and attractions of merit. The main thoroughfare of the amusement section will be known as the "Pay Streak."

An enormous stadium will take care of the field sports and the best athletes of the country will compete for prizes during the Fair. The Amateur Athletic Union contests for 1909 will be held here. Balloon, airship and motor boat and automobile races are scheduled. Every feature of the modern world's fair will be present, in addition to the innumerable absolute novelties offered.

The value of the Exposition to the University cannot be measured in dollars and cents. Seven permanent buildings valued at more than $700,000 will remain. The grounds have been graded and brought to a stage as would ordinarily require at least ten years' time. Far greater than this is the widespread publicity that the University has received from the Exposition. The fame of the University of Washington has been carried into far lands and distant corners of the earth, and who shall say what this is to bring forth? And the ultimate results are beyond prediction.

"The Exposition, by the opening day, will have cost the people of Seattle approximately $2,500,000," said Henry E. Reed, former director of exploitation, in an address before the Saturday Luncheon Club, as reported the following day in the P.-I., October 4, 1908.

Of this amount $800,000 represents the capital stock of the controlling corporation and $350,000 bond issue. The state appropriation was created by funds derived from the sale of land situated wholly within the city, and the preference right to buy these lands is vested mainly in its citizens. This adds another $1,000,000 to the total. Incidental expenditures of a public character to which the people will be put make up the balance.

"It will unquestionably be the most beautiful Exposition ever held in the world. I have been to all those held in recent years, and from what you have already here, combined with the lavish manner in which nature has done her share for you, I think I am safe in saying that this will be the most attractive fair ever held."—Charles Dana Gibson, quoted in the Seattle Sunday Times, February 14, 1909.

The Exposition Architecturally

NO WORLD'S FAIR in history will compare with the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition in the wonderful natural advantages that the surrounding country presents and the appreciation of them by the landscape architects who laid out the ground plans. The Cascades and Geyser Basin form the center of the general decorative scheme.

SPIRIT OF THE NORTH.

Surrounding both of them are sunken gardens that will be rich in bloom for the whole Exposition period. Beyond them are the formal gardens and lawns, the vista on the grounds ending in groves of native evergreens. Above these, in the distance, stands the highest mountain in the United States—Rainier—eighty miles away, but so outlined against the clear blue sky of the Pacific Coast as to seem much nearer. Mount Rainier is south of the Exposition grounds; to the northeast are the Selkirk mountains, and to the west the snow-crested heads of the Olympics make a rugged outline against the sky. Mount Baker, another magnificent peak, is plainly visible from the grounds in a northeasterly direction. In the immediate foreground are Lakes Washington and Union.

The Exposition monument stands in the plaza in front of the government buildings. Eighty feet high, it is expected to be one of the big features. At the base are four figures, emblematic of the Northland, the Southern Pacific countries, the Pacific Coast, and the South Seas. The column is Corinthian, with an ornamental shaft carrying an astronomical globe showing the sign of the zodiac, surmounted by an American eagle. About $7,000 worth of gold dust will gild the entire monument.

At the head of the Cascade Court stands a monument typifying the "Spirit of the Pacific," the sculptor having the aboriginal races of the Pacific Coast countries as models.

The main buildings are: Agricultural, Manufacturers', State Fisheries, Mines, Machinery, Fine Arts, Transportation, Foreign, Auditorium, Forestry, United States Government, Canada, Japan, Alaska, Hawaii, Philippines, and Government Fisheries. They are grouped about the Cascades and Geyser Basin, the main decorative features, and the federal buildings complete the scheme. The government structures are a pleasing combination of French and Spanish renaissance, and the dome on the central one of the group is the architectural climax of the Fair.

Following is given a condensed description of the principal buildings:

Auditorium is Roman classic in cream-colored brick, with facade of Corinthian colonnade. Seats 2,707 and costs $300,000. Ten class rooms are in the well-lighted basement. It reverts to the University.

Fine Arts is Ionic style, with central motive in the form of a portico of four large columns with decorative French Ionic pilasters, flanked on either side by a colonnade of pilasters of similar design. Steel, concrete and cream-colored brick; absolutely fireproof. Cost $190,000. Reverts to University for chemistry building.

Agricultural and Manufacturers' buildings are similar, with only slight differences in detail. The former carries a circular pergola colonnade, with Ionic columns supporting trellis beams and flower tubs. End facades are semi-circular arches, fifty feet wide, crowned with pediments containing the official seal.

The Foreign building stands on the same side of the Cascades as the Agricultural building, and Ionic columns were used to harmonize with the adjoining buildings. On the opposite side of this court of honor stand the Manufacturers' and Oriental buildings, where Doric columns have been used for the sake of harmony with the adjacent structures.

The Forestry building will be the largest log house ever built, and about the front of the structure will be 124 logs each forty feet high and five feet in diameter. The weight of each one of these great logs is estimated at 50,000 pounds. The logs used in the exterior of the building are being left in the rough, while those used in the interior will have the bark removed. The structure is 320 feet long. It reverts to the University for use by the School of Forestry.

The Music Pavilion is of Colonial architecture, with many of the characteristics of the French style, carrying columns modeled after those surrounding Washington's old home at Mt. Vernon.

The California State building is of Spanish Mission architecture, and the Oregon building is strictly Roman classic in style. This structure is topped by a huge dome and commands prominence in the sky line.

The Machinery Hall, a cream-colored brick structure, to be the permanent engineering building for the University, is a modern adaptation of the Spanish Mission architecture.

The Washington State building is two stories in height, of brick faced with plaster, and in design is a free American treatment of the classic French style of architecture. It will be used as a library building after the Exposition.

Top—A.-Y.-P. Administration Building, to become University Law School.
 Center—Forestry Structure, to be used by University Forestry School.
 Bottom—Washington State Building, to revert to University for Library.

The structure to be occupied by the Japanese and Chinese will be strictly Oriental in general character. On the Pay Streak, the Exposition amusement street, many of the structures will follow the Japanese architecture, and the entrance to the gayety boulevard is of Jap-Alaskan design, so called because the main arch will consist of totem poles supporting curved pagoda roofs.

The formal gardens approaching the Manufacturers' and Agricultural palaces are similar to those in the public park of Versailles, and are French in design.

The principal work of sculpture is the Exposition monument, at the head of the Cascades.

The animal groups about Geyser Basin are an elk, bear, timber wolf and cougar, all representative of the Northland. Ornamental vases, carrying the official emblem of the Exposition staff, circle the entire central court around the Cascades and Geyser Basin and in front of several of the larger buildings. These vases will contain many varieties of flowers, and the pergolas about the front of the buildings will be completely covered with climbing roses. The electroliers on the grounds are of French renaissance design and the settees of Roman design. The decorative light standards provide for a large sphere of light and each contains sixty thirty-candle power lights.

The 1909 Exhibition will be well lighted, and thousands of lights will be used in the illumination of the buildings. On the Manufacturers' and Agricultural buildings will be a total of 17,000 lights for the exterior decorations, and it requires more than 5,000 each to outline all of the Mines and Fisheries buildings. On the Fine Arts building will be 4,000 globes, and the Auditorium will require 5,000 lights. In the Geyser Basin are more than 1,000 lights, and 1,500 will be used in the electrical decorations under water about the Cascades, illuminating the falls with the colors of the rainbow.

Obituary

RENE SEELEY—1886-1909.

The University deeply mourns the loss of Miss Seeley. She was born in St. Joseph, Missouri, and prior to her residence in Seattle attended the University of Illinois, where she became a member of Delta Gamma Sorority. She entered the University of Washington September, 1907, but discontinued her studies during the following year, intending later to resume them. She died January 15, 1909.

G. E. HOLLINGSWORTH.

After three weeks' confinement G. E. Hollingsworth, of the Class of 1910, died at his home at 2341 57th North, January 9, 1909. Mr. Hollingsworth never attended college regularly, ill-health chiefly causing him to go only on alternate years. He was born at Ellis, Kansas, October 7, 1881. Death was due to heart dropsy.

!STUNG!

The College Man's Heaven

BY JACK HENSLEY, 'II.

When the last Senior thesis is finished,
And the bluebooks have been laid aside,
When the last final quiz is written,
And the faculty all have died,
We shall stop, and faith we shall need it,
And rest for an aeon or two;
Or will the Master of all the good workmen,
Just set us to work anew?

Will professors we knew as mortals,
Meet us at Heaven's bright gate?
Will Daggy, in Oral Expression,
Reprove us for coming in late?
Will Thorpe wax witty in Soph. comp.,
Because a few papers we miss?—
May the gods of our fathers protect us,
Lest Heaven should turn out like this.

There'll be no Lab. work or Trig.,
And Logic will never give pains,
But instead we'll loaf with a vengeance,
There'll be nothing but athletic games.
We'll chew Oregon up to a frazzle,
And Whitman, fifty to six;
And Idaho won't have a look-in,
With Eakins to furnish the kicks.

And Pullman will never play ringers,
California be 'fraid to debate,
And "Conny," with five hundred crew men,
Can always produce a clean slate.
Clarence Berge will make the track team,
"Buck" Williams will do the same,
The bowlers will pose in the spotlight,
And the wrestlers will get in the game.

And after the season is over,
 With us at the top all the while,
 The Senate won't cut down our budget,
 While Pullman looks on with a smile;
 But we'll just be lousy with money,
 And the manager needn't play tight,
 And we'll have a new gym., too, begorra,
 And the campus with arc lamps we'll light.

Never more must we go to assembly,
 And then we can always cut gym.,
 Angevine can continue his fussing,
 Which same makes a big hit with him.
 Everybody can go out canoeing,
 And take in some good vaudeville;
 And then we'll feed at the Savoy,
 And there won't ever be any bill.

Oh, there'll never be any con list,
 And no one be sent home to dad,
 And the co-eds, of course they won't jilt us,
 So no Freshman's heart will be sad.
 But when the last lesson is finished,
 And the bluebooks in smoke float away,
 It'll be like a summer vacation,
 Forever and ever just play.

Problem in Military Science

If three weeks' service in the commissary department at Tampa during the Spanish-American War entitles one to wear a military cloak, a swagger and title of Captain, would the man who curries the General's horse be justified in calling himself an Assistant to the General ?

DORMITORY STOCK EXCHANGE.

"Hey, I'll give you an apple for your pie."

"I'll raise you an apple."

"Excuse me, Mr. Jones, I'll give you an orange and an apple. Here's two oranges."

"I'll give you all my chocolate and pineapple for a week."

"SILLY DAYS"

And now there come the silly days,
The silliest of the year;
When everybody has a "case,"
And has it bad, I fear.

The time once lost in social life
Will turn to enterprise,
And things now dead, or failing fast,
Take on a healthy guise.

The Glee Club will excel in glee,
The band outgrow its freaks,
And Prexy will appoint a man
To oil it when it squeaks.

There will be laws on students' hair,
To keep them human kind—
Restrictions on the height above
And distance out behind.

In short, 'twill be a blissful life,
All run by rule of thumb;
The vices quelled, and virtue free—
All hail, millenium!

The Only Way a Co-ed Can Get a "W."

IN Y. W. C. A. ROOM

NOTICE! Girls, PLEASE do NOT put your FEET on the upholstered SEATS.

MARY SMITH, Chairman.

Stale-Mate

THIS is a story of a Bachelor Faculty Man who bet a thirty-five dollar dinner against a fifty-dollar silver set that he could get a wife within one year. The matrimonial agreement was entered into April first, nineteen eight. The parties of the second part were faculty brothers of the Bachelor Faculty Man, and went into the contest, it is said, not so much in the spirit of winning as of getting the B. F. M. married. The B. F. M. announced nonchalantly that he would establish a few outposts in the enemy's territory on fleet and regatta day, and then, during summer school, storm the citadel and incidentally ask for the knives and forks about September one. But fleet day and its manifold privileges, and regatta day and its multifarious opportunities, came and went; likewise Junior day and campus day, and all those other days of joyous springtime when marital details are wont to be arranged, slipped by, and the B. F. M. still procrastinated and waited afar off. To his faculty playmates he drew lively pictures of brilliant conquests in the near future, but summer passed and dull, brown autumn saw only a few attempts, feeble and futile, to the credit of the Bachelor Faculty Man.

In vain did his clubmates urge him forward to greater endeavor; in vain did they plan little soirees and harmless pink-teas. Only once did the B. F. M. come within striking distance of the wager and wife. For days he courted assiduously and ardently; salted peanuts and trolley rides had he provided with the reckless abandon of a far more youthful Lothario. Now a trip to West Seattle, a stroll on the beach, a rest in the sand, a trembling voice, and—a click of the camera.

Christmas holidays bore no fruit, and all eyes were turned to the Easter vacation. Then, with the bursting of buds, the rippling of rills, the warbling of birds, then with all nature throbbing with life, the B. F. M. swore a mighty oath that he'd win that bet in a Garrison finish. But high hopes died on the announcement of no spring vacation, and a few days before April first the B. F. M. acknowledged to commiserating friends that he had lost the bet, and furthermore that he feared he would never be able to make good.

His six faculty brothers admit he hasn't made good with the dinner.

"Reproaches on Thee, Conibear."

A young co-ed once told me, "There, there,

It is terribly naughty to swear!"

Now she rows on the crew
(S'h-h! She makes the air blue),
My reproaches on thee,—Conibear!

"ECONOMICS"

"Economics" is the dope

For maidens young and fair;

An "A" they'll get,

The poorest yet,

While Doc Weld's in the chair.

"BUFFETED"

There was a man in college town
Who was so wondrous wise,
He was rushed around by all the frats,
But he joined the Sigma Chis.
They bade him get his lessons,
But this he would not do;
So he grabbed his hat, and quit the frat,
And pledged to Sigma Nu.

"Now, are you good at queening?"
They asked of little Sam,
When he said "No," they said, "You go
And pledge yourself Phi Gam."
The Fijis gladly took him,
They said they liked his type;
But they quickly changed their notion
When he wouldn't light a pipe.

"I think I like the Phi Delts,"
He said to himself one day;
And he smiled a smile, as after awhile,
He wandered up that way.
Did Phi Delta Theta take him?
Did they! Well, I guess yes—
But, no, they didn't keep him long,
For he didn't know how to dress.

"Now what can I do?" he said to a barb,
"I wish that I could die."
"Oh," said the barb, "don't give up yet,
There's Beta Theta Pi."
He finally pledged to the Betas,
And remains with that bunch still;
He's known to all the druggists
As "the warmest Beta pill."

—Submitted.

BE CAREFUL WITH THE TRUTH

Once upon a college paper,
Was a man who sought the truth;
Told it without fear or favor,
Coldly told it, without ruth.

Vengeance overtook him later,
Overtook him with a zest;
For he left his Alma Mater,
Graduated, by request.

Moral:

Higher, then, soared his desires;
And when all cried "You are right,"
Said the faculty were ——;
Printed it in black and white!

Lives of editors who flout you,
Leave a moral, as you see:
Tell the truth of all about you,
Save about the faculty.

—Roy M. Crismas.

To the Sphinx.—Whose fine Italian hand fixed the Auditorium stage so that the only dramatic performance that can be presented is a monologue stunt?

THE POWER OF THE PRESS—NOT!

BANTZ, FAMOUS ATHLETE, ASSUMES ROLE OF HERO

WHILE GIRLS ADORE, IMPLORE AND ENCORE, DRIVES
MAN FROM CELLAR.

How would you like to be adored as a hero by 60 University of Washington co-eds? That's what Burwell Bantz, a senior, varsity tackle and former captain of the track team, is to the dormitory girls, just because he rescued them from the burglarious intentions of a Jack-Johnson-complexioned gentleman last Friday night.

Bantz, who has only recently succumbed to the wiles of Cupid, was spending a pleasant evening with the object of his affections in the reception room of Clarke hall, surrounded by numerous unattached co-eds, when the gathering was rudely disrupted by the entrance of a hysterical young woman announcing the presence, in the basement, of a dusky and uninvited visitor.

Chivalric is the soul of Burwell Bantz. He would expell the intruder.

"We'll go, too," chorused the fluttering hearts around him, each one inwardly quaking with delicious thrills of expectation.

Bantz is nothing if not unassuming and he dissuaded them from their purpose.

He sallied forth alone.

Outside the building, near the southwest corner, he was greeted with:

"Good evening, suh," and a husky "smoke" stepped from the shadows.

Bantz is some big himself, and just now intraining for the spring athletics, he tips the beam at 195 So he spoke up confidently.

"What are you doing here?" he demanded.

"Just waiting for a party," mildly explained the accused.

Now here is the climax. Without further ado Bantz walked over and tried the basement door. When he turned around again the bashful visitor had departed.

It was discovered that several carving knives and some tableware was missing. But that does not detract from the hero's exploit, for consider what danger he offered himself to when he approached that "horrid negro."

The girls are going to make Bantz a five-pound box of fudge.

Won't that be lovely?

WHAT'S THE USE

Papa sent this young man from Blueridge
To search through the world after knowledge;

But he said, "What's the use,
To pursue this wild goose?"

So he's now in his third year in college.

There was a young man—he's named
Parker,

His girl he set out to spark her,

But the Junior Laws came,

Captured him and Van Dame,

And saved 'em a trip to the barber.

THINK, LITTLE FRESHMAN, PONDER

(Parody on Shine, Little Glow-worm.)

Once a maiden bright and fair,
 A maiden bright and fair,
 Did come to college
 Bent on learning classics rare,
 On learning classics rare
 And all such knowledge.
 Shakespeare was her ideal man,
 He was her ideal man;
 She worshipped Caesar,
 Loved her Latin books to scan,
 Her Latin books to scan.
 Tho't nothing easier.
 My pretty maid
 Had you assayed

To keep such regulations,
 Toil and strife
 Will be your life,
 And many tribulations.

Chorus:

Think, little Freshman, ponder,
 As thro' the paths you wander;
 Why not take lake navigation?
 Very best course in all creation;
 Queening's taught by Densmore,
 Weld is versed in love lore;
 Thorpe's room, dear, is just above,
 'Tis there you learn of love.

STENROH.

AN INTERRUPTED TRAGEDY

BY J. B. HARRISON.

A Play with a Leading Man, but Not a Hero.

Time—Presently. Place—Guess.

CAST OF CHARACTERS.

(In order of importance—in the play, not in life.)

Merle.
Dr. Morganford.
Conibear.

Girls' Crew.
Men's Crew.
A Philosopher.

Curtain reveals Merle facing seawards, with hand uplifted in attitude of command. At sight of the tremendous tidal Wave which is depicted realistically upon the back-drop, the audience shrinks back in terror; but when they see that the turbulent sheet stands quelled by Merle's imperious gesture, they are reassured, while the Wave hangs upon Merle's word with painted breath.

MERLE (turning to the audience, and bowing with unconscious (!) grace):

Of such a deed, of such a man
The world has never heard;
This monster from the sea of ink
Obeys my slightest word.
Behold!

F. P. MORGANFORD (entering brutally, just as Merle is about to be applauded):

Oh execrations! Curses! Oaths!
By Golly! Gosh! Gee Whiz!
Of all the things I've ever heard
This is the worst what is!

(He unfolds a newspaper and reads, oblivious of Merle's presence.)

"While fire burns, and water runs,
And audiences freeze,
Let Junior classes shun The Frogs
Of Aristophanes."

Benighted, false, debasing, vile!
Rebellion, war and schism!
In all my days I've never seen
Such gross philistinism!

MERLE (stumbling in his embarrassment into the tidal Wave, but recovering himself immediately):

By all the fiends of earth and hell!
I'm terribly annoyed!
I wrote those lines, what boy is this
Dares criticise my woid?

CHORUS (of Frogs, behind the scenes):

All innocent the hero stands,
The villain's on his track;
Red blood will surely soon be shed—
Ka-ki, koack, koack.

(Merle draws forth a villainous looking fountain pen and is about to take a cruel thrust at Morganford, when Conibear appears suddenly with the Girls' Crew.

CONIBEAR:

Was't echoes of the things I've said
When rowing with the boys
That seemed to linger in the air?
What was that profane noise?

MERLE (seeing the girls, he instantly sheathes his weapon, assumes a striking pose, and says, aside):

At ruling Waves, and killing knaves,
(Looking fiercely at Morganford)
I'm up among the peers;
But if you'd see me at my best,
Just watch me with the dears.

GIRLS' CREW (in chorus):

Is this the man that rumor saith
Is full of artifice?
Why, you have just to look at him
To see he's awf'ly nice.

MEN'S CREW (they dance nimbly onto the stage and are about to add a verse containing a challenge to Merle, when they are stopped by an angry outburst from Morganford).

MORGANFORD (in great vexation):

Too many people in this play,
It shatters all the unities;
We'll quickly put a halt to this,
(Calling into the wings)
Hey! Come, stop these impunities.

(Enter a Philosopher. At sight of him the crowd dissolves like a summer mist.)

PHILOSOPHER (shaking his head in disappointment):

How sense deceives. I would have sworn
I smelt a social function;
If it were so, I'd flunk them all
Without the least compunction.

(Exit Philosopher.)

CHORUS OF FROGS (finally breaking the perfect silence):

Of shedding blood this later age
Has surely lost the knack;
We've never seen so tame a bluff—
Ka-ki—koack—koack.

(Curtain descends sadly.)

TO EVERY ONE of our Advertisers credit is due, in proportion to the space he has bought, for the financial success of this 1910 Tyee. The management of the Annual catered only to reliable firms dealing in first-class wares, believing as much in the purity and merit of its advertising as in the high quality of its subject matter.

With this in mind, we recommend and urge University students to liberally patronize our Advertisers. They will be sure of courteous and fair treatment, and at the same time can in a measure repay these firms for the advertising space they have so kindly bought in the Annual.
